or person in possession of land continues a nuisance originated by his predecessor in title or possession, he is liable therefor,[98] where the continuance of the nuisance is caused by what he does.[99] A mere failure to remove a nuisance erected by another does not, however, constitute a continuance of it, but there must be some positive act done evidencing its adoption.[1]

C. Ownership of Land. The bare fact of ownership of real property imposes no responsibility for a nuisance on it;[2] and so where a nuisance is created on land by a person other than the owner, and the owner was not instrumental in causing the nuisance, he is not indictable therefor,[3] nor can an injunction be issued against him.[4] Neither is he liable for the damage caused by the nuisance,[5] although it is otherwise as to a nuisance created by an independent contractor for the owner or occupant of the property.[6] Conversely, it is not necessary to charge a person with liable for a nuisance on the premises which is due to his act or failure of duty,[23] and the landlord is not liable for damage resulting from a nuisance which it was the tenant's duty to remove or repair[24] unless he authorized the continuance of the nuisance.[25] Neither is the landlord liable for a new nuisance created by the tenant during the term.[26] One who leases property for a purpose which must prove injurious or offensive to others is liable for the injury resulting therefrom.[27] Where the declaration alleges that both the landlord and the tenant are in possession and there is no plea traversing the possession, which is thus admitted, both landlord and tenant are liable.[28]

H. Joint and Several Liability. All persons concerned in the creation or commission of a nuisance are liable for the damage caused thereby;[33] and where a nuisance is created by the joint act of several persons an action for the entire damage may be brought against either[34] or against all.[35] Where the damage is the result of the acts of several persons acting independently, each is liable for his proportion of the damage only if the nuisance is private;[36] but one who creates a public nuisance is responsible to individuals specially damaged not only for the actual loss he alone has occasioned but also for the damages caused by similar acts to other persons acting independently which contribute to the injury complained of.[37]

V. PRESCRIPTIVE RIGHT.

A. As to Private Nuisance — 1. Acquisition in General. It is well established that a person may acquire by prescription the right to maintain a private nuisance;[38] but it has been said that, while this is theoretically true, practically there are very few cases in which such prescriptive right can be established.[39]

2. Character of Use. In order to establish a prescriptive right to maintain a private nuisance the use must be adverse[40] under a claim of right,[41] and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the person whose right is invaded,[42] and the nuisance must be continued in substantially the same way and with equally injurious results for the entire prescriptive period.[43]

3. Duration and Continuity of Use. In order to give rise to a prescriptive right the use must be uninterrupted and continuous[44] for the full prescriptive

New machinery in ancient mill.— If, in an ancient mill, a new and different machine, of another description, is erected, the operation of which is a nuisance to the mills below, the antiquity of the mill itself affords no protection to the new machine erected within it, but the latter is to be regarded as an original and independent mill. period.[45] But continuous use does not necessarily mean constant use,[46] and a temporary cessation of the use without any intention to abandon it does not destroy the prescriptive right or require that the period shall start anew when the use is recommenced.[47] Where, however, the business or use has been discontinued and abandoned and afterward resumed, the period prior to such abandonment cannot have any effect toward the acquirement of a prescriptive right.[48]

4. Prescriptive Right as to Similar Nuisance. Where a brick-kiln is complained of as a nuisance, the owner's prescriptive right to another kiln nearer to the house and almost in line with the kiln complained of cannot be urged as a reason for not granting an injunction.[49]

5. Burden of Proof. A person claiming a prescriptive right to maintain or commit a nuisance has the burden of proof as to the prescription.[50]

B. As to Public Nuisance. There is no such thing as a prescriptive right to maintain a public nuisance,[51] and hence prescription is no defense to a proceeding to abate a nuisance either by public authorities[52] or by a private individual,[53] or

See 37 Cent. Dig. tit. "Nuisance," § 163.

The reason for the rule that equity will not abate a public nuisance at the instance of a private person who has sustained no special damage is that if one individual may interpose for an infringement upon public right, or for a public injury, any other person may, and, as a discharge in any case would be no bar to any other, there would be no end to litigation. Yost v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 29 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 85.

Under Ga. Code, § 3002, providing that, "where the consequences of a nuisance about to be erected or commenced will be irreparable in damages . . . a court of equity may interfere to arrest a nuisance before it is completed," an individual is entitled to relief by injunction against a nuisance which will injuriously affect his health, whether it is a public or private nuisance, and without regard to whether, from the location of his house or other circumstances peculiar to him, he suffers from it more than the public generally. A county as the owner of property injured by the deposit of mining débris in the tributary of the Yuba river may maintain an action and enjoin the deposit therein of such débris by a mining company engaged in sluice mining upon such tributary, as a public nuisance in such case is also a private nuisance to the county. Relief may be granted on the ground of public benefit as well as of preventing special injury to plaintiff, where plaintiff shows such special injury as gives him a standing in court. Indianapolis Water Co. v. American Strawboard Co., 57 Fed. 1000.

Necessity for irreparable injury.— It is not enough to confer jurisdiction on equity to enjoin a public nuisance at the suit of a private citizen that plaintiff has suffered damages special and peculiar to himself in which the public do not share, but it is also necessary that the injury should be such that it is incapable of being measured and compensated in damages, so that an action at law will afford plaintiff no adequate remedy or redress. If the health or property of a person be injured from such a cause, he may recover, although the health and property of the general public affected by the nuisance be affected in the same manner. The character of the injury would be the same in each case, but the damages sustained by each individual would be distinct from that suffered by the public, and a recovery therefor would be permitted. . . . Section 3331 of the Code [Iowa Code 1897, § 4302] authorizes a recovery by any person injured by a nuisance."

3. Direct or Consequential Injury. It has been held that the injury must be direct,[65] but there is also authority for the view that this is not necessary but consequential damage is sufficient to support the action.[66]

4. Number of Persons Affected. The number of the persons who are specially injured by a nuisance does not affect the right of action for such injury or make their injury identical with that of the public at large, but any of such persons may maintain an action for the nuisance;[67] and the fact that several persons join in a suit to abate a public nuisance does not show that each of them may not have sustained such special injury as entitles him to relief.[68]

5. Particular Injuries. Whether the individual seeking relief has sustained special injury of such a character and to such an extent as to support his action is a matter which depends entirely upon the facts appearing in each particular case.[69]

VII. REMEDIES.

A. Ancient and Modern Remedies. The old common-law remedies by action for nuisance were two: (1) A writ of quod permittat prosternere, which was in the nature of a writ of right and commanded defendant to permit plaintiff to abate the nuisance or show cause against the same, and plaintiff could have judgment to abate the nuisance and for damages against defendant; and (2) an assize of nuisance in which the sheriff was commanded to summon a jury to view the premises and if they found for plaintiff he had judgment to have the nuisance abated and for damages. Both these remedies, however, have been long out of use.[70] The modern remedies are the right to abate the nuisance without any legal process,[71] a suit in equity for the abatement of or an injunction against the nuisance,[72] an action at law for damages,[73] or a criminal prosecution of the person responsible for the nuisance.[74] It has been held that where concurrent remedies exist for the abatement of a nuisance, the choice and prosecution of one excludes a resort to the other.[75]

B. Summary Abatement — 1. By Private Individual — a. Right to Abate — (I) Private Nuisance. It is well established that a person who is aggrieved by a private nuisance has the right to abate the same by his own act,[76] upon his own motion,[77] without instituting any legal proceedings.[78] So the person aggrieved may kill a dog which haunts his premises, and by barking and howling becomes a nuisance,[79] cut off branches of a neighbor's trees overhanging his land,[80] remove a part of an adjoining owner's wall which overhangs his premises,[81] or cut off the eaves of a building overhanging his property.[82]

(II) PUBLIC NUISANCE. It is also well settled that any person may by his own act abate a public nuisance,[83] although, according to the weight of both reason and authority, in order that a person may have the right to do this he must have suffered some special injury from the nuisance.[84]

b. Extent of Injury. In order to justify a person in abating a nuisance by his own act, the nuisance must cause a particular injury to his person or property[85] at the time when he undertakes to abate it;[86] but if the nuisance is such that he could maintain an action therefor, this is sufficient, and he may enter and abate it, although at the time the damage resulting to him therefrom is merely nominal.[87]

c. Time For Abatement. The remedy of abatement by act of the person injured should be resorted to within a reasonable time,[88] as the right to so abate may be lost by acquiescence in the injury for a considerable time.[89]

d. Notice to Abate.[90] Where a nuisance can only be abated by going on the land of another person, from which the nuisance proceeds, the person desiring to abate must give previous notice to the owner of the land to remove or abate the nuisance,[91] unless it appear that the owner of the land was the original wrong-doer by placing the nuisance there,[92] that it arises from his default in the performance of some duty or obligation cast upon him by law,[93] or that the nuisance is immediately dangerous to health, life, or property and the necessity for its prompt removal urgent.[94] Where one proposes to abate a nuisance exclusively by doing

Offer of money to remove nuisance.— The fact that a railroad company has offered the owner of property adjoining the right of way money to remove trees whose branches overhang the right of way and endanger its operation by obstructing the view of engineers does not give him the right to further notice before abatement of the nuisance by the company. acts upon his own land, without going on the land of his neighbor from which the nuisance proceeds, no previous notice to abate is necessary.[95]

e. Mode and Extent of Abatement.[96] A person may for the purpose of abating a nuisance enter upon the premises where the nuisance is maintained,[97] and use whatever force is necessary to protect and defend his own property from injury,[98] but he must not be guilty of a breach of the peace.[99] A person abating a nuisance must not in so doing be guilty of any excess,[1] or inflict any unnecessary injury ;[2] and he can remove only so much of the objectionable thing as actually causes the nuisance.[3] Neither has he any right to appropriate the materials of the demolished structure for his own use.[4] Where there are alternate ways of abating a nuisance, of which one involves interference with the property of an innocent person and the other interference with the property of a wrong-doer, the latter must be adopted.[5]

f. Liability of Person Abating. While a person can be the judge in the first instance as to the existence of a nuisance,[6] when he undertakes to abate the same without legal proceedings he acts at his peril and assumes all liability for exceeding his legal right.[7] He may subject himself to criminal prosecution,[8] or he may be compelled to respond in damages to the person injured, if it be made to appear that what he destroyed was not a legal nuisance [9] so injuring him as to give him the right to abate it,[10] or if he did unnecessary injury in abating what did amount

Extent of injury see supra, VII, B, 1, b.

In a plea of justification or excuse for an entry to abate a nuisance, caused by the flooding of certain land by plaintiff's dam, it is sufficient if defendant allege that he was possessed of an undivided moiety of such land, without stating more particularly what title he had. Great Falls Co. v. Worster, 15 N. H. 412.

Evidence.—Where defendant, the proprietor of a mining claim on a stream, destroyed plaintiff's dams, situated below defendant's, on the ground that they constituted a private nuisance to defendant's prior right of appropriation of the water, defendant is not to a legal nuisance,[11] or he may be compelled to restore a building which he has illegally destroyed.[12]

2. By Public Authorities.[13] A public nuisance may be summarily abated by the public authorities,[14] but this power must be reasonably exercised,[15] without doing unnecessary damage or injury to property,[16] and is limited to a removal of that in which the nuisance consists.[17] The right is derived from necessity, and the necessity must exist to justify its exercise.[18] It has been held that the power of municipal officers to abate a public nuisance without statutory or judicial process stands upon the same footing as the power of a citizen.[19] The person responsible for a nuisance may be held liable for the expense of removing or abating it.[20] entitled, in an action for injury to plaintiff's dams, to show the length of time he and his predecessors had used the water of the stream to carry off tailings from his mine or for flushing the stream, in the absence of evidence that defendant had been injured in any manner by the construction of plaintiff's dam, either by the backwater flooding defendant's premises, or by obstruction to the stream. Turner v. Locy, 37 Oreg. 158, 61 Pac. 342.

Instructions asked by defendant, justifying his acts complained of in a suit against him for destroying the dams of a lower proprietor of a mining claim on a non-navigable stream, on the ground that they constituted a private nuisance to him, as an upper proprietor of a mining claim, are properly refused, where not predicated on the assumption that defendant sustained even nominal damages by the maintenance of the dams. Turner v. Locy, 37 Oreg. 158, 61 Pac. 342.

Question for jury.— In an action for damages for the destruction of property, where the defense is that the property constituted a nuisance, it is for the jury to decide whether the nuisance was a public or a private one, and, if a private nuisance, whether it injured defendant, so that he might abate it. C. Equitable Relief — 1. Power of Courts. Courts of equity have power to give relief against either public or private nuisances[21] by compelling the abate-

Denial of ownership.— Notwithstanding the fact that the statute of March 11, 1846, providing for the recovery of the expense of removing nuisances from the owner, or reputed owner, prohibits "any plea touching the question of ownership" of the premises, it is competent for defendants, in an action under this statute to recover for the cost of curbing and paving an alley which had become a nuisance on account of its defective condition, to deny that they were the owners of the premises, and to allege that the soil had been dedicated to the public for over seventy years. Board of Health v. Gloria Dei Church, 23 Pa. St. 259.

Notice to owner.— Under the Pennsylvania act of March 29, 1867, requiring all deeds and title papers to be registered, and providing that no property so registered shall thereafter be subject to sale for taxes or other municipal claims, except in the name of the registered owner and after service of a writ on him, a notice by the city to remove a nuisance, required by law to be given "to the owner," must be given to the registered owner, if there be one, and the city is bound to put on record every averment necessary to sustain its lien for the removal of the nuisance, and, if the owner's deed was not registered at the time the notice was given, the claim must so allege. Circumstances not warranting interposition of equity.— A court of equity has no jurisdiction of a bill alleging that complainant owned premises adjoining those of defendant; that the latter permitted certain machinery to remain on complainant's land, which he refused to remove after notice, claiming the right to have it there; and that complainant was apprehensive that he would be involved in litigation, there being no such continuing ment or restraining the continuance of an existing nuisance,[22] or enjoining the commission or establishment of a contemplated nuisance,[23] where its nature is such that it cannot be adequately compensated for in damages[24] and it would occasion a constantly recurring grievance.[25] In cases of private nuisance the jurisdiction of courts of equity and of law is often concurrent,[26] although in many cases an nuisance as equity would interpose to abate. Barclay's Appeal, 93 Pa. St. 50.

Where injury in nature of trespass.—Where a city, in accordance with an ordinance duly adopted, builds a temporary open sewer on streets running through a plat which it had never accepted, an abutting property-owner has an action at law for damages for the trespass, but the maintenance of such sewer cannot be enjoined, since the granting of an injunction to abate the nuisance presupposes defendant's right to do work on the street to abate the nuisance, which it did not have. action at law may be sustained where the facts would not justify relief in equity in the first instance.[27] The jurisdiction of courts of equity over the subject of nuisances is not an original jurisdiction[28] and is of comparatively recent origin.[29] It is exercised sparingly,[30] reluctantly,[31] with great caution,[32] and only in extreme cases,[33] at least until after the right and question of nuisance has been first settled at law;[34] and while in modern times the strictness of this rule has been sometimes relaxed,[35] there is still a substantial agreement among the authorities that to entitle a party to equitable relief before resorting to a court of law his case must be clear and free from all substantial doubt as to his right to relief,[36] and there must be a strong and mischievous case of pressing necessity.[37] There must be both injury and damage to justify an injunction.[38] The jurisdiction of equity in regard to nuisances is not taken away by statutes providing remedies in courts of law,[39] and may be exercised notwithstanding the fact that the nuisance is an indictable offense.[40]

2. Considerations Affecting Right to Equitable Relief[41] — a. Certainty of Annoyance or Injury. The general rule is that an injunction will be granted only to restrain actually existing nuisances,[42] and not to restrain an intended act on the ground that it may become a nuisance;[43] and, although where an act or structure will necessarily be a nuisance for which there can be no adequate remedy at law, a court of equity may interfere by injunction to prevent the threatened injury,[44] a mere prospect of future annoyance or injury from a structure or instrumentality which is not a nuisance per se is not ground for an injunction,[45] and equity will not interfere where the apprehended injury or annoyance is doubtful, uncertain, or contingent.[46] So the erection or alteration of a building for a lawful pur-one indicted for maintaining a nuisance has been tried and acquitted will not deprive a court of equity of power to enjoin his continuing the nuisance.

or small, which ought not to be submitted to on the one hand or inflicted on the other, and which, because it is so large on the one hand or so small on the other, is of such constant and frequent recurrence that no reasonable redress can be had therefor in a court of law.[56]

c. Continuous or Recurring Injury. An essential fact to be averred and proved when an abatement of a nuisance is sought is that the annoyance and loss complained of will be continuous or recurrent,[57] for the occurrences of nuisances, if temporary and occasional only, are not grounds for interference by injunction except in extreme cases.[58] But where complainant invokes the aid of equity to prevent the occurrence from day to day of injuries for which he asks damages, caused by an alleged nuisance maintained by defendant, and the existence of the nuisance is established by the verdict of a jury, the relief will be granted.[59]

d. Direct Injury. It has been held that equity will interfere only where the injury complained of is direct and not where it is merely consequential.[60]

e. Unnecessary Injury. Where a business can be conducted so as not to injure another in the use of his property, the latter is entitled to an injunction against operation otherwise.[61]

f. Clear Case of Right. In order to obtain an injunction against or the abatement of an alleged nuisance the complaining party must show a clear and strong case supporting his right to such relief;[62] and so, where injury to com-

Opposition to enterprise from inception.— Upon an application for an injunction to prevent a bleaching company from polluting a stream which was used by complainant for domestic purposes, while the facts that defendants were notified, before establishing their mill, that complainant would permit no pollution of the stream, and that complainant opposed the incorporation of the company, on the ground that the stream would be injured for his use by the establishment of their works, and that consequently a proviso was inserted in the company's charter, forbidding them to injure the water on the complainant's land, do not affect the legal rights of the parties, they constitute a strong claim for the exercise of the extraordinary power of a court of chancery to prevent the nuisance. remedy at law is a strong ground for granting equitable relief.[69] The fact that the person causing the nuisance is amply able to respond in damages does not establish that there is an adequate remedy at law,[70] for a recovery of damages is not in all cases a sufficient redress.[71] Neither is a statutory power to issue a warrant to abate the nuisance, should plaintiff prevail in an action, a remedy equally adequate and beneficial with the remedy in equity.[72] But where an adequate remedy may be had by resorting to a criminal prosecution, an injunction will not be granted.[73]

such resort is required where a thing is a nuisance per se,[77] where its contemplated use will necessarily make it a nuisance,[78] where the injury is manifest and continuous,[79] where the fact of its existence is undoubted,[80] or where from the nature of the case an action at law cannot afford adequate redress,[81] and the danger of injury is imminent.[82] And equity will enjoin without first requiring the existence of the nuisance to be found at law where the injury resulting therefrom is in its nature irreparable,[83] or not capable of compensation in damages,[84] as where loss of health,[85] loss of trade,[86] destruction of the means of subsistence,[87] the permanent ruin of property,[88] or the destruction of the comfortable enjoyment of dwelling-houses[89] will ensue from the wrongful act or erection complained of. In the case of a private nuisance causing injury to a prescriptive right relief may be granted without the right being established at law.[90] Where the existence of a nuisance has been established at law, a court of equity will as a matter of course grant an injunction against its continuance if it is of a constantly recurring character,[91] especially if the damages recovered are purely nominal and therefore inadequate to prevent a repetition of the injury.[92]

Where plaintiff has recovered damages against defendant for the maintenance of a nuisance, and thereafter such nuisance has been destroyed by natural causes, a court of equity will enjoin the reërection of the same, unless it should be made to appear that precautions had been taken to avoid the same injury to plaintiff in the future. k. Relative Injury From Continuance or Abatement.[93] The court will consider the equities presented in the particular case in which its interference is asked,[94] and the injuries which may result to the public by granting the injunction as well as the injuries to be sustained by complainant if it be refused.[95] So an injunction will not ordinarily be granted where the erection complained of has a tendency to promote the public convenience,[96] to an extent outweighing the private inconvenience resulting therefrom;[97] where it is necessary to the welfare of the community generally;[98] or where an injunction would cause serious injury to an individual or the community at large, and a relatively slight benefit to the party seeking such relief;[99] but under such circumstances the person complaining will be left to his remedy at law or merely awarded damages.[1] Even a structure promoting public convenience may, however, be enjoined where the private injury is disproportionate to the public benefit.[2]

l. Acquiescence.[3] One who has slept upon his rights for a considerable time by acquiescing in the alleged nuisance will be denied equitable relief and left to his remedy at law;[4] but the fact that a person knows that a structure is being Acquiescence in a slight nuisance for several years is not such laches as to deprive one of the right to equitable relief when the nuisance is greatly increased. Facts not amounting to acquiescence.— Where defendant erected a dam on his own premises near plaintiff's, whereby the latter were depreciated by the odors of stagnant water in the pond caused by the dam, plaintiff could maintain an equitable action to abate the nuisance, although by suggesting improvements and otherwise she had made efforts to render the pond innocuous and also had taken ice therefrom by defendant's permission. Adams v. Popham, 76 N. Y. 410.

Delay without acquiescence.— When the legal right of one who is injuriously affected by a private nuisance is settled, and the more efficacious remedy of a court of equity is necessary to complete relief, delay in applying to the court for such relief is no ground for a denial thereof, unless coupled with such acquiescence in the nuisance as deprives the complainant of all right to equitable relief. Carlisle v. Cooper, 21 N. J. Eq. 576.

Delay or acquiescence not amounting to estoppel.— Mere delay in commencing a suit to abate a nuisance, or even acquiescence in the act of defendant, unless under circumstances which would create an equitable estoppel, short of the period necessary to give defendant a prescriptive right, would not bar plaintiff's right of action to abate a dam causing an overflow of water as an existing nuisance. Mueller v. Fruen, 36 Minn. 273, 30 N. W. 886.

Denial of right in previous action.— Although an injunction will not be granted, when plaintiff has remained inactive, knowing that defendant in good faith was incurring great expense in prosecuting the work complained of as injurious, this rule does not apply to an application to restrain a city from committing a nuisance by certain sewage improvements, the right to do which has been denied by a judgment in a former action by one of the parties against the city, as in such case the city, being advised of the illegality of its action, is not acting in good faith. Answer admitting demand for abatement.— Where in an action to enjoin the maintenance of a ditch, whereby surface waters were collected from defendants' land, and carried to the streets of plaintiff, the complaint alleged that plaintiff demanded of defendants that they fill up said ditch, but that defendants had failed to do so, and still maintained the same, and the answer denied that plaintiff ever demanded the removal of the ditch, or that defendants ever failed to comply with any legal or lawful demand made by

to the benefit of his grantee or of any one claiming title under or through him, and such person may sue without giving a new notice.[16]

4. Persons Entitled to Sue[17] — a. Private Individuals. An application for the abatement of a private nuisance must be made by the person injured thereby,[18] and any person injured in the enjoyment of his private rights by the continuance of a nuisance may maintain an action to abate the same.[19] The owner of the property injuriously affected by a nuisance has the right and is the proper person to bring a suit for relief,[20] even though he is not in possession of the property, where there is an injury to the fee.[21] On a conveyance of the property the right passes to the grantee,[22] and the grantor cannot afterward maintain a suit for relief.[23] A life-tenant may sue to enjoin a private nuisance affecting his reasonable use and plaintiff, or that they maintained the ditch, such answer was an admission of plaintiff's demand to fill up the ditch, and, such demand being sufficient to put defendants on inquiry as to the effect of same, their refusal to comply with the demand obviated the necessity of further notice. the structure complained of as a nuisance is a good defense to a suit for its abatement.[32] The fact that it will be expensive for defendant to remove the nuisance[33] or that plaintiff could have prevented damage to his property from the matters complained of[34] is no defense. The fact that municipal authorities have tolerated a public nuisance is no defense to a suit by a private individual to enjoin the maintenance thereof.[35] In a suit against a municipal corporation to restrain the maintenance of a nuisance in the form of a sewer, defendant cannot set up the defense that it cannot lawfully enter upon the premises of persons using the sewer for the purpose of abating the nuisance.[36] The fact that the trustees of a hospital did not know that it was being conducted in a manner offensive to complainant and that they would have minimized the evil so far as possible had they known of the condition of affairs is no answer to a suit for an injunction to restrain the maintenance of the hospital.[37] Where plaintiff, owning land on which his residence stood, bought land adjoining subject to certain order easements, he is not estopped to sue to abate a nuisance to his health and comfort in the use of his residence produced by the exercise of those easements.[38] Owners of land adjoining an inclosed ground, to which admission is charged to see ball games, are not estopped to seek injunction against Sunday ball games thereon as a nuisance because for several years before the inclosure persons taking possession of the grounds without let or hindrance played Sunday ball games in the presence of all choosing to look, and the same class of noises had been made, without attempt at relief against the same, by such onlookers and persons alighting at the same place from electric cars and going for amusement to the river and the woods in the vicinity.[39] facts which make it such must be averred, and a mere averment that it is or will be a nuisance is not sufficient.[94] It must clearly appear that plaintiff has personal knowledge of the material facts charged, or he must produce supplemental proof.[95] Matters not material to plaintiff's right to relief need not be set forth.[96]

(II) Special Injury.[97] Where the alleged nuisance is public as well as private, the complaint must show that plaintiff has sustained some injury different in kind from that suffered by the general public,[98] but such special injury need not be alleged where the nuisance is solely a private one.[99]

Construction.— Where, in a private action to abate a nuisance, it is necessary to aver the existence or non-existence of other property-owners than plaintiff, an averment that the premises alleged to be injured are in a certain town gives rise to the presumption that there are other property-owners therein. Siskiyou Lumber, etc., Co. v. Rostel, 121 Cal. 511, 53 Pac. 1118.

estate of plaintiff are set out with sufficient certainty where he alleges himself to be the owner of the premises in fee simple by purchase and to be in possession;[2] but it cannot be presumed that he has any legal or equitable title to the land where the complaint alleges that he is in possession under a contract for the sale thereof to him, but does not state whether the other party to the contract had any title to the land.[3] A bill to enjoin a nuisance which avers plaintiff to be a "tenant and occupier" of the land implies a tenancy from month to month.[4]

(IV) Nature of Injury. In a suit to enjoin the operation of a factory near plaintiff's property, and for damages, allegations that the health of plaintiff's family has been injured by the noise and smoke are proper, as being descriptive of the character of the nuisance.[5] In an action for a private nuisance from a steam cotton press, allegations of increased danger from fire and liability to explode, thereby rendering plaintiff's dwelling unfit for residence and impairing the value of his property, are sufficient.[6]

b. Demurrer. A bill or complaint in a suit to abate or enjoin a nuisance is not demurrable because it does not state that the rights of the parties, in support of the bill, have been settled by a judgment at law,[7] nor can a demurrer be based on the ground that the work, being authorized by the legislature, cannot be abated as a nuisance, where the existence of such authority is not alleged.[8] It has been held that the failure of the complaint to allege any damage to plaintiff different or peculiar from that resulting to the common public, is not ground of demurrer, although in a proper case the objection may be urged under a demurrer on the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.[9]

c. Plea or Answer.[10] Where the complaint charges defendant with a crime defendant may omit a verification of his answer.[11] Averments in the answer which are immaterial to plaintiff's right to relief are properly stricken out.[12]

d. Amendment.[13] The bill, petition, or complaint may be amended by striking out the names of plaintiffs who are not entitled to the relief prayed for,[14] or by adding averments as to special injury to plaintiff.[15] An amendment of the complaint changing the action from one in equity to one at law is not permissible unless made by consent;[16] but it has been held that plaintiff may amend so as to pray for an abatement of the nuisance, although the petition as originally filed merely asked damages to date.[17]

sented by the pleadings[19] or the variance will be fatal.[20] But a variance between the allegations of the complaint and the proof may be disregarded as immaterial where it is not such as to render the allegations unproved in their entire scope and meaning, and defendant was not misled.[21]

12. Evidence[22] — a. Presumptions. In a suit to enjoin the erection of a structure not per se a nuisance, it will not be presumed that it will be so maintained as to become a nuisance;[23] nor will it be presumed in an action to abate a nuisance that defendant, a grantee of the land on which the nuisance was erected by the grantor, knows that it was erected without the consent of persons affected thereby.[24] Where the information in a suit on behalf of the state to abate a structure in a street as a nuisance alleges that the peculiar damage to relator is incidental to the public nuisance, and that the general public suffers and will suffer damage and inconvenience, the presumption is that the prosecuting attorney brought the suit in the exercise of an official duty and not to subserve the peculiar interest of the relator.[25]

b. Burden of Proof. Where the thing complained of is not a nuisance per se or prima facie, the burden is upon plaintiff to show that it is a nuisance in fact;[26] but where the thing complained of is prima facie a nuisance, although not such per se, the burden is upon defendant to show that it is not a nuisance in fact.[27] A private individual seeking to enjoin a public nuisance must show special damage,[28] but such proof is not necessary where the nuisance is a private one.[29] Where the state, through its proper officer, seeks the jurisdiction of a court of equity to abate by injunction a public nuisance, it must show that such nuisance is an injury to the property or civil rights of the public at large, which it is the prosecuting officer's duty, as the agent of the public, to prevent.[30]

In criminal prosecution or penal action see infra, VII, E, 7.

19. See Butterfield v. Klaber, 52 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 255, holding that in an action to abate marble works as a nuisance, an allegation in the complaint that such works caused loud, dissonant, and offensive noises was sufficient to admit proof that the blowing of a steam whistle connected with the works caused great annoyance and was unnecessary to the successful prosecution of the business.

20. Brown v. Woodworth, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 550, holding that where the count, in an action of nuisance, alleged that the nuisance was below plaintiff's land, and the proof was that it was adjoining and on plaintiff's land, the variance was fatal.

The existence of the nuisance must be clearly proven.— Eastern Dist. Atty. v. Lynn, etc., R. Co., 16 Gray (Mass.) 242.

Proof of non-compliance with municipal regulation.— If the use of steam engines and furnaces has been regulated by an order of the municipal authorities, duly made and recorded, under Mass. St. (1845) c. 197, the burden is on a party who complains of the works as a nuisance to prove a non-compliance with the terms of the order or an unlawful or improper use of the works. Call v. Allen, 1 Allen (Mass.) 137.

Degree of certainty required.— A charge that the burden of proof is on plaintiffs to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the use of adjacent grounds for cemetery purposes will probably result in poisoning the water-supply and will contaminate the atmosphere of their homes is erroneous as imposing a greater degree of certainty than is required in civil cases. c. Admissibility. Subject to the general rules of evidence,[31] any evidence bearing upon the question whether the matter complained of is a nuisance and whether the relief asked should be granted is admissible.[32] So evidence is admissible which tends to show the nature and extent of the injury or annoyance,[33] the results thereof,[34] and the manner in which defendant conducted the business complained of during the time complained of.[35] But evidence which is immate-

32. Bear River, etc., Water, etc., Co. v. Boles, 24 Cal. 359 (holding that in a suit to abate a nuisance arising from defendant's reservoirs intercepting the water of plaintiff's ditch, evidence is admissible as to plaintiff's ditch being out of order and incapable of carrying water, as in that case the reservoir could not be a present nuisance); Friburk v. Standard Oil Co., 66 Minn. 277, 68 N. W. 1090 (holding that in an action by a wife to abate a nuisance caused by the manner in which defendant handled oil in the vicinity of plaintiff's dwelling, and to recover damages, it was proper to permit plaintiff to testify, for the purpose of showing the use to which she was putting her property, that her family consisted of her husband and six children, and that it was error to exclude evidence as to whether plaintiff had complained to defendant of the alleged nuisance); Neuhs v. Grasselli Chemical Co., 8 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 203, 5 Ohio N. P. 359 (holding that, in determining whether a lawful business shall be enjoined, evidence of the value of the plant, of the number of men employed, of the influence of other factories in that neighborhood upon the atmosphere and property, and of the appliances used by defendant is properly admitted).

The record of defendant's indictment and conviction of the offense of erecting a nuisance in connection with the business complained of is admissible without any supplemental bill setting it forth. Peck v. Elder, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 126.

Affidavits may be received and read.— Philadelphia v. Crump, 1 Brewst. (Pa.) 320; Smith v. Cummings, 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 92.

Evidence of matters subsequent to verification of petition admissible.— State v. Williams, 90 Iowa 513, 58 N. W. 904.

Hypothetical question.— There was no error in admitting answers to hypothetical questions as to the effect of the proximity of defendant's place on the value of plaintiff's property and its desirability as a residence, in some of which questions it was assumed that another disorderly establishment was in the neighborhood, as it was necessary and proper to consider all of the surroundings. Kissel v. Lewis, 156 Ind. 233, 59 N. E. 478.

33. Shroyer v. Campbell, 31 Ind. App. 83, 67 N. E. 193, holding that in a suit by the proprietors of a store against the tenants of neighboring rooms to enjoin and abate a nuisance, consisting of a stairway which blocked plaintiff's doorway and the creation of offensive odors, it was not error to permit one of the complainants to testify that the odors were the subject of remarks by their customers.

Plaintiff can show damages suffered after the commencement of the suit for the purpose of showing a continuing injury. Hayden v. Albee, 20 Minn. 159.

The presence and extent of deleterious gases may be shown by the effects on the human senses and the conditions of the human system, and it is not necessary that it should be shown by chemical analysis of the atmosphere. McClung v. North Bend Coal, etc., Co., 1 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 247, 31 Cinc. L. Bul. 9.

34. Hoadley v. M. Seward, etc., Co., 71 Conn. 640, 42 Atl. 997 (holding that on an issue as to whether the operation of a factory near plaintiff's house should be enjoined, evidence was admissible that the noise and smoke incident to such operation injured the health of plaintiff's family, and that the maintenance of the nuisance increased the illness of a member of plaintiff's family, although the illness might not have been originally caused by the nuisance); Wing v. Rochester, 9 N. Y. St. 473.

Remoteness in time.— In a suit for the abatement of certain nuisances and for damages, evidence concerning the health of the neighborhood, or of particular persons residing therein, at a period some fifteen years or more before trial, is too remote for comparison to disprove evidence as to the health of plaintiff and his family, alleged to have been affected by the nuisance complained of. Astill v. South Yuba Water Co., 146 Cal. 55, 79 Pac. 594.

Effect on others.— On the issue as to the right to an injunction plaintiff may show the effect of the matter complained of upon other persons or other property similarly situated. Hoadley v. N. Seward, etc., Co., 71 Conn. 640, 42 Atl. 997; McClung v. North Bend Coal, etc., Co., 1 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 247, 31 Cinc. L. Bul. 9. Contra, Harley v. Merrill Brick Co., 83 Iowa 73, 48 N. W. 1000; Fay v. Whitman, 100 Mass. 76. And evidence is also admissible to show the effect on vegetation and physical comfort of smoke, soot, and gases emitted by similar works in other and distant localities. McClung v. North Bend Coal, etc., Co., supra.

35. Meek v. De Latour, 2 Cal. App. 261, 83 Pac. 300, holding that in an action to abate a nuisance consisting of a factory, it was not error to permit several witnesses to testify that after complaint had been made defendant caused a longer smokestack to be used and that thereafter the evils were not so great.

Reputation and newspaper reports.—Where the complaint in a suit to restrain the main-

rial,[36] purely speculative,[37] or not within the issues[38] cannot be admitted. Matters not proper for consideration on the question of whether the thing complained of is a nuisance may, however, be considered in determining whether the relief asked should be granted.[39] Defendant may introduce evidence to show that the annoyance complained of may have proceeded from structures other than that maintained by him and which it is sought to enjoin,[40] or that he is not the person whose acts caused the injury;[41] and where the defense is estoppel in that plaintiff knowingly permitted the structure complained of to be built without objection, evidence of the cost of the structure is properly admitted.[42] If a business which is prima facie a nuisance can be conducted so that it will not be a nuisance, its owner should be allowed to offer proof thereof and his rights should be then protected.[43] Where complaint is made of odors from a barn it is proper to receive testimony of experienced persons as to the extent to which odors could arise from a barn kept in the condition of the one in question.[44]

d. Weight and Sufficiency. In order to authorize an injunction against the erection or continuance of a nuisance, the evidence must be determinate and satisfactory,[45] and should establish at least a prima facie necessity for the tenance of a disorderly saloon and beer garden near plaintiff's residence alleged that such place had become notorious and the subject of newspaper comment, and that such evil reputation had affected the value of plaintiff's property, together with other property in the neighborhood, evidence of such reputation and as to newspaper reports concerning it was properly admitted. Kissel v. Lewis, 156 Ind. 233, 59 N. E. 478.

36. Fisher v. Zumwalt, 128 Cal. 493, 61 Pac. 82 (holding that in an action to abate a nuisance caused by odors arising from refuse of a creamery, it was not error to exclude defendant's testimony as to how the management of his creamery and the premises about it compared with the management of other creameries and the premises about them); Baker v. Bohannan, 69 Iowa 60, 28 N. W. 435 (holding that in an action to abate a nuisance created by maintaining a yard for feeding cattle and hogs evidence that plaintiff used his own lot for a similar purpose, and that it was in as bad a condition as defendant's, was not admissible in the absence of an offer to prove that plaintiff's lot was a nuisance to defendant); Sultan v. Parker-Washington Co., 117 Mo. App. 636, 93 S. W. 289 (holding that, in a suit to enjoin the maintenance of a nuisance in the form of a plant for the manufacture of asphalt, evidence that the city in which the plant was located had made contracts for the improvement and repair of its streets with asphalt had no tendency to prove that the city had licensed the operation of the plant).

37. Wing v. Rochester, 9 N. Y. St. 473, holding that, in an action to restrain defendant from continuing a nuisance created by the discharge of sewage into a stream flowing through plaintiff's premises, it was error to allow witnesses to state that in their opinion sewage from cholera patients passing into the stream would not have become disinfected when it reached plaintiff's premises.

38. Astill v. South Yuba Water Co., 146 Cal. 55, 79 Pac. 594 (holding that where, in an action for the abatement of certain nuisances and for damages, plaintiff's claim was based solely on the negligent use of an easement by defendant, which it was alleged caused the nuisances, evidence showing an adverse use of a part of the land on which the alleged nuisance existed, to show title thereto in defendant was not admissible); Hoadley v. M. Seward, etc., Co., 71 Conn. 640, 42 Atl. 997 (holding that in a suit to enjoin the operation of a factory the smoke from which was claimed to injure plaintiff's property, evidence for defendant as to whether a witness living on property differently situated had ever noticed any effect on his premises from smoke from other sources than the factory was properly excluded); Finch v. Green, 16 Minn. 355 (holding that where there was no claim made that a nuisance was wilfully maintained, it was not error to reject evidence offered on behalf of defendant that the same was not wilful).

39. Mackay-Smith v. Crawford, 56 N. Y. App. Div. 136, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 541 [affirmed in 171 N. Y. 662, 64 N. E. 1123], holding that while the presence in the immediate locality of several stables, a blacksmith shop, and a vinegar factory could not be considered on the question of whether the storing of cheese on defendant's premises constituted a nuisance, it might be considered in determining whether such storing should be enjoined at the suit of one owning an adjoining dwelling.

writ.[46] The general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence[47] govern in determining whether the evidence is sufficient to establish or disprove the existence of a nuisance and plaintiff's right to the relief claimed.[48]

13. Trial or Hearing.[49] The court will not order the abatement of a nuisance until defendant has been heard,[50] and in order to lay a proper foundation for a judgment of abatement or injunction there should be a specific finding as to how much of the structure must be abated or enjoined in order to prevent the injury complained of.[51] Where plaintiff proves a public nuisance with special damage to himself, his motives in suing cannot be inquired into.[52] Where the relief sought is purely equitable the court is not bound to submit the issues to a jury,[53] and it has been held that an action to abate a nuisance and for damages is an action in equity and not an action at law,[54] and a party is not entitled as a matter of right to have the issues tried by a jury;[55] but on the other hand it has also been held that, a claim for damages being a purely legal demand, the fact that with such demand there is united an equitable demand for an injunction, cannot deprive the action of its nature as an action at law triable by a jury.[56] In any event it is

56. Threatt v. Brewer Min. Co., 42 S. C. 92, 19 S. See also Miller v. Keokuk, etc., R. Co., 63 Iowa 680, 16 N. W. 567, holding that under Miller Code Iowa, § 3331, by which damages may be recovered for a nuisance, and an injunction had in the same within the power of the court to direct any or all of the issues to be tried by a jury,[57] and where all the issues are ordered to be tried by a jury plaintiff does not waive his right to equitable relief by proceeding to trial under the order.[58] Where the court directs all the issues to be tried by a jury the verdict must determine all the issues so as to enable the court to give judgment upon the entire case and as to all the relief demanded;[59] and while such an order remains in force the court has no authority to make additional findings of fact, upon which, together with the verdict, to render judgment.[60] The instructions to the jury should state the law as applicable to the facts of the case and conform to the general rules governing the matter of instructions.[61] A finding that the nuisance complained of causes injury[62] and should be abated,[63] or a verdict for damages in an action for abatement and damages,[64] is sufficient to support an order of abatement. A finding that plaintiff is not entitled to recover is in effect a finding that the alleged nuisance does not exist.[65]

14. Relief Awarded[66] — a. In General. The relief to be awarded rests largely in the discretion of the court,[67] and so, in an action for abatement or injunction and damages, the abatement does not follow as of course upon the recovery of damages.[68] The rights of defendant as well as those of plaintiff are entitled to consideration, and the court will not interfere with defendant's use and enjoyment of his property or compel the destruction thereof further than is necessary to give plaintiff the protection to which he is entitled.[69] Where the business or use of property alleged to be a nuisance is lawful and can be carried on without causing the injuries complained of, defendant should not be restrained from carrying it on at all;[70] but the injunction should go merely against carrying it on so as to prove injurious or offensive,[71] leaving defendant the right to carry it on

in a proper manner,[72] and the court may require defendant to use such appliances as will remedy the nuisance.[73] But where the premises are such that, from their nature and location, they cannot be put to the use complained of without creating a nuisance, the court will grant an injunction restraining absolutely the use found to be a nuisance, and will not confine the remedy to restraining the particular mode of use theretofore employed.[74] An injunction against a noisy business may restrain the carrying on of it only at certain times when it is shown to be a nuisance.[75] Where a structure itself constitutes a nuisance it may be destroyed for the purpose of abatement;[76] but where the nuisance consists in the use of a structure which is lawful and not of itself a nuisance, the relief should be by enjoining such use,[77] and the structure cannot be destroyed.[78] So also where it is sought to restrain the erection of a building for a business or use which it is claimed will be a nuisance, the injunction should be limited to such business or use,[79] and should not restrain the erection of the building where it is not of itself a nuisance;[80] but it is proper, where a building is being erected which can only be used for a purpose which is unlawful, to restrain the erection.[81]

Bourbon Stock Yard Co. v. Wooley, 76 S. W. 28, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 477.

Injunction and nominal damages.— In a suit for an injunction and damages for a nuisance a judgment granting the injunction and awarding six cents damage is fatally defective, because if the sum awarded to plaintiff is sufficient he has sustained no substantial injury entitling him to an injunc-

but a party cannot recover damages for the depreciation in value of his property, based on the structure complained of being permanent, and in addition thereto have the structure removed by injunction.[90]

15. Allowing Cause to Stand Without Final Decree. In a case where the proofs were insufficient to justify a decree putting an end to a business, the court has ordered the cause to stand without final decree, with permission for either party to apply for leave to produce additional proofs or to be heard anew.[91]

16. Dismissal.[92] Where a bill to enjoin the construction of a sewer brought before the sewer is completed, although while it is in use, is dismissed for complainant's failure to prove the sewer a nuisance, the dismissal should be without prejudice, since the sewer, when completed, may become a nuisance.[93] And where the testimony is conflicting as to whether or not the matter complained of has become a nuisance, the bill should be dismissed without prejudice to the right of the complainant to proceed by indictment or action at law.[94]

17. Judgment, Decree, or Order.[95] The abatement of a nuisance is accomplished by a court of equity by means of an injunction proper and suitable to the facts of the case,[96] or by directing defendant[97] or an officer of court[98] to abate it. The decree or order should be consistent with the case made by the pleadings and tion; while, on the other hand, if plaintiff has suffered substantial loss the compensation awarded him is insufficient. Smith v. Ingersoll-Sergeant Rock Drill Co., 12 Misc. (N. Y.) 5, 33 N. Y. Restraining continuance.— When an action seeking both legal and equitable relief is tried at circuit, and the jury pass upon the questions of fact, it is competent for the circuit judge to render judgment, not only for the abatement of the nuisance and for damages, but also restraining the continuance of the nuisance. People v. Metropolitan Tel., etc., Co., 11 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 304, 64 How. Pr. 120.

Provision for annulling decree.— A court is not to make provision in its final judgment for a reopening or renewal of a controversy closed by its judgment, and having adjudged plaintiff entitled to a perpetual injunction restraining acts of defendant which amounted to a nuisance, it should not provide for annulling the decree when it should appear that defendant had provided means for abating such nuisance. the relief asked for,[99] and should be definite and certain as to what defendant is required to do or to refrain from doing.[1]

18. Execution.[2] Where a decree has been rendered against the corporate authorities of a city for the abatement of a public nuisance, on information in the name of the state on the relation of certain citizens, any citizen may interfere as relator by a proceeding in the nature of a bill of revivor, and call on the court to carry the decree into execution.[3] A writ of habere facias seisinam is not the proper form of execution in an assize of nuisance,[4] but it seems that the proper writ is a distringas to compel defendant himself to abate the nuisance.[5]

19. Violation of Injunction. Where an injunction has been issued a violation thereof by defendant is punishable as a contempt.[6]

20. Appeal.[7] The granting or refusal of relief against an alleged nuisance is subject to appeal,[8] but a party cannot appeal from a decree in his favor.[9] Unless abuse or discretion be clearly shown the appellate court will not interfere with the decision of the trial court.[10]

1. Ballentine v. Webb, 84 Mich. 38, 47 N. W. 485, 13 L. R. A. 321, holding that a decree adjudging that defendant shall so conduct his business as not to be offensive is not sufficient, as it gives him no rule of conduct which the law has not before prescribed.

Decree held sufficiently definite and certain. — In a suit by a private citizen to abate, as a nuisance, a dam constructed by a city to provide a reservoir for its waterworks, a decree that the city alter the dam's construction, or the sluices or wasteways, in such manner and to such extent that it will not cause back-water to stand on plaintiff's land, is not objectionable as indefinite or as not instructing defendant what it should do. 21. Costs,[11] and Expense of Abatement.[12] The allowance of costs in proceedings for the abatement of nuisances is governed by the statutory provisions on the subject.[13] The person responsible for the nuisance may be held liable for the expense of removing or abating it;[14] but in a case where a mill-dam situated in a city had become a public nuisance, not on account of its original construction but by the growth of the city about it, it was held that the expense of the removal of the dam, as decreed in an action to restrain its continuance, was properly placed upon plaintiff, unless defendants preferred to remove the dam themselves.[15]

D. Recovery of Damages — 1. Right of Action. A person who is injured by the maintenance of a nuisance is entitled to recover damages therefor.[16] Where he is entitled to equitable relief such relief is additional to the recovery of damages,[17] and the person injured cannot be required to elect between the two remedies;[18] but a person may be entitled to recover damages for a nuisance, although the circumstances are such that he is not entitled to any equitable relief against it.[19]

2. Nature and Form of Action. The person injured may bring an action for the recovery of damages solely,[20] or he may seek equitable relief and damages for injuries sustained in the same action.[21]

3. Successive Recoveries. Where a nuisance is of such a permanent character that a single recovery can be had, including the whole damage past and future resulting therefrom, there can be but one recovery;[22] but where the nuisance is

b. Mode and Form of Notice. No particular form of notice or request is required.[32] It may be either written or oral,[33] or it may be by acts done.[34] It is only necessary that it shall clearly inform the person affected by it of the existence of the nuisance [35] and of the desire of the person injured to have it removed,[36] so that the person to whom it is addressed shall fully understand the ground of complaint and that the person giving the notice is unwilling to have the nuisance continued.[37] Where a railroad company erected a nuisance and the road was subsequently leased to another company which continued to maintain the nuisance, notice to the president and officers and the section master of the lessee company was sufficient.[38] damages caused by a nuisance he must have some interest in realty the enjoyment of which is affected by the nuisance;[44] but a lawful possession, although unaccompanied by any title, is sufficient to support an action.[45] The right of action for permanent injuries caused by a nuisance is personal and cannot be assigned by deeding the land to another,[46] and hence a purchaser cannot recover damages for injuries occasioned prior to his purchase;[47] but where the nuisance is of a continuing character one who purchases the property affected thereby after its erection may recover damages for injuries subsequent to his purchase,[48] and the same rule applies to one who acquires the property by descent.[49] A lessee is entitled to recover damages sustained by him during his tenancy from the maintenance of a nuisance on adjoining property,[50] although he leased the property or cover for a nuisance not affecting the property but merely the enjoyment thereof (Jones v. Chappell, L. R. 20 Eq. 539, 44 L. J. Ch. 658, holding that the owner of houses occupied by weekly tenants is within the rule that a reversioner cannot maintain an action in respect to a temporary nuisance), or at best he cannot in such case recover more than nominal damages (Dieringer v. Wehrman, 9 Ohio Dec. renewed his lease thereof after the creation of the nuisance;[51] and with knowledge of its existence,[52] for a tenant who "comes to a nuisance" should be accorded the same degree of protection as one who purchases property near an existing nuisance.[53]

6. Defenses[54] — a. In General. In an action for damages for a nuisance there can be no balancing and setting off the benefit and injury resulting from separate and distinct acts,[55] and hence one who creates a private nuisance cannot show, in defense to an action for damages caused thereby, that his prior conduct in regard to the same matter resulted in a benefit to plaintiff;[56] but where plaintiff limits his claim for damages to the diminished value of his land because of the erection complained of he cannot recover if such erection has increased the value of his land by an amount in excess of the damage done.[57] It is no defense that it is necessary to carry on the business complained of and that the same is useful to the public,[58] or that others in the same vicinity are incommoded in the same manner as plaintiff.[59] It is no defense to an action for a nuisance which caused disease and sickness that defendant has been indicted for the nuisance and convicted.[60] The fact that plaintiff maintains a separate and independent nuisance affecting his premises does not defeat his right to recover for the nuisance maintained by defendant, although it should be considered in determining the extent of defendant's liability.[61] In an action for damages to plaintiff's mill from a nuisance caused by defendant, it is no defense that such mill stands in part on a public street, where it appears that this is owing to plaintiff's being misled by an inaccurate survey of the street, unless the location of his mill contributed to the injury.[62] A charter right of a corporation to acquire and hold at such place as it shall find expedient all necessary property on which to construct and maintain terminal railroad facilities and accommodations is no defense to an action for damages from a nuisance consisting of a round-house erected by it.[63] One who is sued for damages for a private nuisance cannot defend on the ground that he has only injured and obstructed plaintiff in a right which he had no authority to exercise.[64] In an action for maintaining a stagnant pool the fact that the pool might have been drained by the city will not relieve defendant from liability for special damages caused thereby.[65]

b. Acquiescence or Consent.[66] Plaintiff's acquiescence in or consent to the matters complained of may defeat his right to recover damages therefor;[67] but a mere failure to complain,[68] or delay in bringing suit for damages,[69] does not necessarily show such acquiescence as to defeat a recovery. The fact that a person knows that a structure is being built and the purpose for which it is to be operated, and makes no objection thereto, does not estop him to afterward sue to recover for damages caused by its use,[70] unless his conduct influenced the owner in building the structure.[71] A person is not precluded from recovering damages for a nuisance injuring his property by the fact that his grantor brought no action for it and made no complaint against it;[72] but, if the owner of property has charged it with a servitude as to the matter complained of, a subsequent grantee cannot recover damages therefor.[73]

c. Abatement by Defendant.[74] The fact that defendant has abated the nuisance does not deprive plaintiff of his right to recover damages for injuries prior to such abatement;[75] but it has been held that defendant may for the purpose of confining the proof to the damages accruing up to the institution of the suit plead and prove that he intends within a short time to remove a structure alleged to create a nuisance.[76]

d. Abatement by Plaintiff.[77] The fact that plaintiff has himself abated the nuisance does not defeat his right to recover for injuries previously caused thereby.[78]

e. Neglect of Plaintiff. Want of ordinary care in avoiding an injury from a nuisance created by another has been held to be a full defense to an action against the latter for such injury;[79] but the fact that plaintiff might by his own act have abated the nuisance and did not do so is no defense.[80]

7. Jurisdiction of Courts.[81] The jurisdiction of particular courts in an action for damages for a nuisance depends upon the statutes and judicial system of the state where the action is brought.[82]

produce the injury complained of, they must be sued separately, and a single action cannot be brought against them all jointly.[91] An action for a nuisance caused by the noise of trains is properly brought against the railroad company as a corporation, and not against its agents, who caused the noise to be made.[92] Where a wife held possession and enjoyed real property purchased by her husband in his own name prior to his death with funds inherited by her from her father's estate, as she alleged, the heirs of her deceased husband were not necessary parties to a suit by her to recover damages to the land from an alleged nuisance maintained by defendant.[93]

Claim for cost of abatement merely.—A complaint alleging that plaintiff is the owner of a lot, that defendant without right and that the alleged nuisance is the cause thereof.[98] But it is not necessary to allege that the acts complained of were unlawfully[99] or negligently[1] done, or that the nuisance was unknown to plaintiff at the time the injury was sustained.[2] The complainant should show plaintiff's interest in the premises injuriously affected,[3] and defendant's interest in the premises on which the nuisance exists.[4]

(II) Notice to Defendant.[5] In order to maintain an action for a nuisance which has been erected by defendant's predecessor in title it is necessary to allege that defendant was given notice of the nuisance[6] or had knowledge of its existence;[7] but no averment of notice or request to abate is necessary where the action is against the person who created the nuisance,[8] or where the nuisance complained of is not the original erection but the wrongful use of it by defendant.[9]

(III) Special Injury.[10] Where the nuisance is a public one, some special damage to plaintiff must be alleged in the complaint or declaration,[11] but such an constructed a sewer over it, and permitted it to get and remain out of repair, so that nauseous gases escaped, preventing plaintiff's use of the property, that defendant failed to repair it when asked by plaintiff to do so, and that thereupon plaintiff repaired it at a certain cost, which amount defendant refused to pay and for which plaintiff asks judgment, states a cause of action for damages from a private nuisance, although seeking to recover part only thereof, the cost of abating it. Murray v. Butte, 35 Mont. 161, 88 Pac. 789.

That an alleged nuisance may be abated, and that there is no threat on the part of those creating it to continue the conditions giving rise to it, are facts going to the measure of damages the injured person would be entitled to receive for the damages already sustained and not to the sufficiency of a complaint for injuries caused thereby. 98. Russell v. Bancroft, 79 Tex. 377, 15 S. W. 282.

A declaration need not, in terms, allege that defendant's wrongful acts were the natural and proximate cause of plaintiff's sickness, but it is enough to allege that defendant's wrongful creation of a stagnant pond caused plaintiff's ill health. Garland v. Aurin, 103 Tenn. 555, 53 S. W. 940, 76 Am. St. Rep. 682, 56 L. R. A. 316.

Statement held sufficient.—A declaration alleging that the substances deposited by defendant, and the odors emitted therefrom, had caused the death of a large number of horses, and that plaintiff and her family had been sick and disabled as a result of the presence of such substances, raised a fair inference that the noxious odors came unto and into plaintiff's premises, although such fact was not expressly alleged, and was sufficient to withstand a motion in arrest of judgment. 3. Cornes v. Harris, 1 N. Y. 223, holding that in an action for damages merely, it is not necessary that the declaration should show that plaintiff has a freehold estate in the premises affected by the nuisance, as it is enough that plaintiff is in possession of such premises.

4. Horton v. Brownsey, 10 N. Y. St. 800, holding that it is necessary to allege that the person maintaining the nuisance is a tenant or a freeholder interested in the land upon which it is maintained.

allegation is not necessary to support the action where the nuisance complained of is a private one.[12]

(IV) DAMAGES.[13] Damages for depreciated market value of the property injured can be allowed only when specifically pleaded,[14] and in order to warrant a recovery of future damages it must specifically and certainly appear that such damages will result from the nuisance.[15]

(V) VERIFICATION. It has been held that the petition or complaint need not be verified.[16]

(VI) AMENDMENT. A count for the continuance of a nuisance may be added to the declaration after the testimony on each side is given.[17] In an action for damages because of the erection of an alleged nuisance maintained by defendant, it is not error to refuse to allow plaintiff to amend his petition by striking out an allegation as to the erection of the nuisance and alleging notice to defendant of the nuisance and request for an abatement and refusal of defendant to comply with the request.[18]

b. Plea or Answer. The plea or answer should conform to the general rules applicable to such pleadings in actions for damages.[19]

c. Issues, Proof, and Variance.[20] The proofs must accord with the case presented and the issues made by the pleadings.[21]

Evidence admissible under pleadings.— Where a complaint alleges that noxious vapors pervading plaintiff's land are "a nuisance seriously interfering with the comfortable use and enjoyment of said building by plaintiff as a place of abode, and with the proper use thereof by him in the conduct of his business," evidence of the discomfort suffered by him, and its effect, is admissible.

11. Evidence[22] — a. Burden of Proof. The burden is on plaintiff to show all matters essential to his recovery.[23] He must show that he has suffered substantial injury,[24] that the injury complained of was caused by the alleged nuisance,[25] and that he exercised reasonable and ordinary care and diligence to avoid the injury.[26] Plaintiff must also show special damage where the nuisance is a public one,[27] and notice to defendant where defendant did not create the nuisance.[28] Defendant has the burden of proving affirmative matters of defense.[29]

b. Admissibility. Subject to the general rules of evidence,[30] any evidence which tends to establish or refute the right of plaintiff to the relief demanded is admissible.[31] So plaintiff may introduce evidence to show the existence of the Aldrich v. Wetmore, 56 Minn. 20, 57 N. W. 221. An allegation that defendant acted with the consent of the owner of the land on which the nuisance existed was sufficient to admit proof of the interest held. Horton v. Brownsey, 10 N. Y. St. 800.

Matters amounting to variance.—Under an allegation that a nuisance had been erected by defendant, a recovery cannot be had, where the evidence shows that it was erected by a predecessor in title of defendant. Southern R. Co. v. Cook, 106 Ga. 450, 32 S. E. 585. An allegation that defendant caused "an unhealthy pond of standing water" is not sufficient to authorize the introduction of testimony showing injury sustained by plaintiff in consequence of sickness caused by the pond. Morris v. McCamey, 9 Ga. 160. Where, in an action for nuisance in carrying on a flour mill, plaintiff does not claim vindictive damages or allege gross carelessness, evidence by defendant of the proper management of the business is inadmissible. Cooper v. Randall, 53 Ill. 24. In an action by the owner of an adjacent building against the keeper of a disorderly house for the maintenance of a nuisance, evidence that plaintiff kept a saloon in his building, in violation of law, during a period for which he claims no damages in his complaint, is not admissible under the general issue. Miller v. Blue, 43 Kan. 441, 23 Pac. 588. It is not permissible to prove a nuisance of a character essentially different from that charged. O'Brien v. St. Paul, 18 Minn. 176. An allegation that defendant originated the nuisance will not support proof that he continued it only. Rychlicki v. St. Louis, 115 Mo. 662, 22 S. W. 908. In an action for a private nuisance, where there is no allegation of title in plaintiff, evidence of an agreement between plaintiff and his wife, under which he was to occupy the premises as a home, is properly refused. Kavanagh v. Barber, 68 Hun (N. Y.) 183, 22 N. Y. Suppl. 874 [affirmed in 149 N. Y. 608, 44 N. E. 1125]. In an action for personal injuries plaintiff cannot recover as for a nuisance. App. 290 (holding that for the purpose of proving that odors were capable of producing discomfort and sickness, it is competent to permit persons other than plaintiff to testify that they were severally nauseated and made sick by such odors, the court instructing the jury that plaintiff is not entitled to recover for any discomfort or sickness caused to others by such odors); Belvidere Gaslight, etc., Co. v. Jackson, 81 Ill. App. 424 (holding that in an action for injuries to the water in a well occasioned by the erection and operation of a gas plant, testimony concerning the condition of water in wells on other premises in the neighborhood is admissible to show the extent and character of the injury sustained by plaintiff, as tending to prove that the operation of the gas plant could produce the injury complained of); Gempp v. Bassham, 60 Ill. App. Div. 548, 85 N. Y. Suppl. 673 (holding that to determine the injury to the lessee of a hotel from a structure in the street, constituting a nuisance, the amount of business done before its erection is competent evidence of what loss was caused by the nuisance); Robinson v. Smith, 3 Silv. Sup. 490, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 38; Murray v. Archer, 1 Silv. Sup. 366, 5 N. Y. Texas.— Brennan v. Corsicana Cotton-Oil Co., (Civ. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 588, holding that, on the question of the impairment in value of property caused by the maintenance of a nuisance, evidence of the changed condition of the neighborhood, due to the nuisance, is admissible.

that such annoyance, discomfort, or injury was caused by the matter complained of as a nuisance,[34] that defendant knew of the existence of the nuisance,[35] and the depreciation in the rental value of plaintiff's property on account of the nuisance may also be shown.[36] Defendant may introduce evidence legitimately tending to show that the injury complained of was not caused by his acts or operations.[37] But evidence which is irrelevant,[38] which relates to immaterial matters,[39]

Where plaintiff sues as trustee of property to recover for nuisance, she can show sickness and suffering in her family caused thereby for the purpose only of proving the unhealthy condition of the premises. Cohen v. Bellenot, (Va. 1899) 32 S. E. 455.

W. 172 (holding that in an action for damages for maintaining a nuisance near plaintiff's residence, causing foul gases and noxious smells, evidence on behalf of defendant of another source of such gases and odors near plaintiff's residence is competent); Eller v. Koehler, 68 Ohio St. 51, 67 N. E. 89 (holding that where it appeared, in a suit by plaintiff for injuries caused by defendant's machinery, that four railroad tracks ran along the premises of both plaintiff and defendant, defendant was entitled to show that repeated observations had been taken as to the noises and vibrations in defendant's shops, and observations as to the noises and vibrations made by railroad trains passing, and that those from the railroad trains were many times greater than those from defendant's machinery, as tending to show that the injuries might have been caused solely by the railroad trains, and not by the machinery); Alexander v. Stewart Bread Co., 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 526 (holding that, in an action to recover damages for injuries caused by the operation of a bakery in a residential neighborhood, defendants may show the manner in which the machinery was constructed, and that no noise resulted from its operation, and may also show the thickness of the wall and the manner in which it is constructed, and that horses kept on the lower floor of the building were necessary to use in connection with the business); Shain Packing Co. v. Burrus, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 75 S. W. 838 (holding that where plaintiff sought to recover from defendant for so negligently conducting its packery as to pollute a stream on plaintiff's premises, and cause a disagreeable and unhealthy stench about his residence, it was error to exclude evidence by defendant that the stench complained of originated wholly or in part from another stream on plaintiff's premises, polluted by others).

38. Alabama.—Vernon v. Edgeworth, (1906) 42 So. 749, holding that, in an action for the maintenance of a privy, proof that, when plaintiff bought his property, there was a public privy at or near the place of the one in controversy, in the absence of any offer to show how the privy was maintained, is irrelevant.

California.— Meek v. De Latour, 2 Cal. App. 261, 83 Pac. 300, holding that evidence as to the depreciation in the value of plaintiff's property is not admissible to show the actual existence and gravity of the nuisance.

Kansas.— Stephens v. Gardner Creamery Co., 9 Kan. App. 883, 57 Pac. 1058, holding that, in an action to recover damages to property by the maintenance of a creamery, comparisons with respect to the operations of defendant's creamery and other creameries are inadmissible.

Missouri.— Chamberlain v. Missouri Electric Light, etc., Co., 158 Mo. 1, 57 S. W. 1021 (holding that in an action for injuries to plaintiff's houses from vibrations of the ground caused by the operation of defendant's machinery, evidence that a certain house near to plaintiff's had been rented all the time was irrelevant); Kirchgraber v. Lloyd, 59 Mo. App. 59 (holding that evidence of the effect of smoke, vapors, and fumes produced by other brick-kilns on premises adjacent thereto is irrelevant on an issue as to whether a particular brick-kiln is a nuisance to an adjoining property-owner and his family, on account of smoke and vapors arising therefrom).

New York.— Cibulski v. Hutton, 47 N. Y. App. Div. 107, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 166, holding that where the issue was whether a powder house was a nuisance, it was proper to exclude evidence that gunpowder was a necessity in conducting the chief industries in the city where it was located.

See 37 Cent. Dig. tit. "Nuisance," § 115½.

39. California.— Meek v. De Latour, 2 Cal. App. 261, 83 Pac. 300, holding that in an action for damages from a nuisance and to abate the same, evidence as to the depreciation in the value of plaintiff's property is not admissible on the question of damages.

Iowa.— Pettit v. Grand Junction, 119 Iowa 352, 93 N. W. 381.

Kansas.— Stephens v. Gardner Creamery Co., 9 Kan. App. 883, 57 Pac. 1058, holding that in an action to recover damages to property occasioned by the maintenance of a creamery, evidence that plaintiff had made or which is otherwise incompetent under the general rules of evidence[40] cannot be admitted.[41]

c. Weight and Sufficiency. The general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence[42] govern in determining whether the evidence in a particular case is sufficient to warrant the relief claimed or awarded.[43]

12. Trial.[44] The question as to what constitutes a nuisance is one of law for no objection to the building of the creamery, or the pond in connection therewith, is inadmissible.

Maryland.— Baltimore Belt R. Co. v. Sattler, (1907) 65 Atl. 752 (holding that in an action for damages for interference with the enjoyment of property caused by smoke from defendant's passing trains, city ordinances making certain requirements for the disposition of smoke produced by the engines, and testimony as to what would have been the effect upon plaintiff's property had the ordinances been observed, were inadmissible); Metropolitan Sav. Bank v. Manion, 87 Md. 68, 39 Atl. 90 (holding that letters of plaintiff to defendant, intended as notice to the latter to abate the nuisance, are immaterial evidence).

New York.— Myers v. Malcolm, 6 Hill 292, 41 Am. Dec. 744, holding that evidence of the wealth of defendant is inadmissible.

Pennsylvania.— Robb v. Carnegie, 145 Pa. St. 324, 22 Atl. 649, 27 Am. St. Rep. 694, 14 L. R. A. 329, holding that in an action for damages against a coke company for an injury to adjoining land from smoke and sterilizing gases, a question as to where the coke company obtained the material from which they make coke, what price they paid for it, or what the miners who brought it to the surface were paid for mining it, should have been excluded.

Texas.— Corsicana Cotton Oil Co. v. Valley, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 250, 36 S. W. 999, holding that in an action for damages for maintaining a nuisance in a city, evidence that the municipal authorities have not taken action for the abatement of the nuisance is immaterial on the issue as to whether the matters complained of constitute a nuisance.

See 37 Cent. Dig. tit. "Nuisance," § 115½.

40. Hoadley v. M. Seward, etc., Co., 71 Conn. 640, 42 Atl. 997 (holding that in a suit to enjoin the operation of a factory near plaintiff's house, and to recover damages for such operation, evidence of the effect of the operation on others similarly situated was incompetent on the issue of damages); Holbrook v. Griffis, 127 Iowa 505, 103 N. the court;[45] but it is for the jury to decide whether a particular act or structure or use of property, which is not a nuisance per se, is a nuisance in fact.[46] It is for the jury to decide whether the alleged nuisance is the cause of the losses or injuries complained of,[47] and to what extent such losses or injuries are attributable to the nuisance,[48] whether the injury from the alleged nuisance is substantial,[49] whether plaintiff's injury is distinguishable from that suffered by others in the same neighborhood,[50] and whether the notice to remove the nuisance given before suit was reasonable.[51] The amount and items of damages are also a question for the jury.[52] The instructions should conform to the general rules on the subject of instructions,[53] and properly state to the jury the questions upon which they are to pass,[54] and clearly explain to them the rules of law applicable to the case,[55]

45. Smiths v. McConathy, 11 Mo. 517. Whether or not the location of a factory alleged to be a nuisance is convenient for carrying on the business, and whether or not such use of the property is reasonable, are not questions for the jury, as, in law, no place can be convenient for the carrying on of a business which is a nuisance, and which causes substantial injury to the property of another, nor can any use of one's own land be reasonable which deprives an adjoining owner of the lawful enjoyment of his property. 54. Frost v. Berkeley Phosphate Co., 42 S. C. 402, 20 S. E. 280, 46 Am. St. Rep. 736, 26 L. R. A. 693, holding that a charge that defendant must have so used his property as not to unlawfully injure his neighbors, and that if he so used it as to injure his neighbors, "in an unlawful and unreasonable manner," he is liable, is objectionable as submitting to the jury a question of law.

Submission of query.— When the court formulated a query for the jury as to whether defendant "caused" the nuisance, it was error to refuse an amendment proposed by plaintiff that the query be as to whether defendant "caused or permitted" it. Hochstrasser v. Martin, 62 Hun (N. Y.) 165, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 558.

55. Propriety of particular instructions see the following cases:

Iowa.— Holbrook v. Griffis, 127 Iowa 505, 103 N. W. 479 (holding that in an action to recover damages for a nuisance whereby plaintiff's well was polluted, an instruction that proof that plaintiff had established a nuisance on his own premises, rendering the water in his well unfit for drinking purposes, would not defeat his right of recovery from defendant if plaintiff had suffered damage from defendant's acts, on the ground that the doctrine of contributory negligence did not apply to such case, was erroneous); Harley v. Merrill Brick Co., 83 Iowa 73, 48 N. W. 1000 (holding that an instruction that plaintiff, to recover, must prove every allegation of her petition, was erroneous, since it would lead the jury to believe that there could be no recovery on any one of the distinct elements of damage alleged, unless all were proved).

Maryland.— Euler v. Sullivan, 75 Md. 616, 23 Atl. 845, 32 Am. St. Rep. 420, holding that an instruction that, if defendant erected a boiler and engine near to the house and lot of plaintiff, and smoke, steam, and cinders escaped from the chimneys of defendant and entered the premises of plaintiff so as "to render her house and premises less comfortable, enjoyable, or useful than they otherwise would have been, then the plaintiff is entitled to their verdict," was too broad, and was misleading.

Missouri.— Chamberlain v. Missouri Electric Light, etc., Co., 158 Mo. 1, 57 S. W. 1021; Long v. Kansas City, 107 Mo. App. 533, 81 S. W. 909; Gibson v. Donk, 7 Mo. App. 37, holding that in an action for damages occasioned by the establishment of a coal yard near plaintiff's house, it was error to instruct the jury to find for plaintiff, if the rental value of his property was materially injured.

New York.— Cibulski v. Hutton, 47 N. Y. App. Div. 107, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 166, holding that it was not error in charging the jury to state to them, by way of illustrating the court's definition of a "nuisance," that a powder house located near the court-house would be a nuisance, and that one located in the measure[56] and elements[57] of damages, and the period as to which a recovery may be had.[58] It is error for the court to refuse on the trial to give its opinion on a legal point relevant to the issue.[59] An instruction which, taken alone, might be imperfect, may be unobjectionable where taken in connection with other portions of the charge it states the law fully and correctly,[60] or where the omission is not such as to mislead the jury.[61] Requested instructions are properly refused where they do not correctly state the law as applicable to the case,[62]

a wilderness would not be a nuisance, where they were also told that the illustration was extreme.

Ohio.— Toledo v. Lewis, 17 Ohio Cir. Ct. 588, 9 Ohio Cir. Dec. 451, holding that it was error, in an action for injuries caused by filling streets in such manner as to cause water to set back on adjacent property, to refuse to charge that the property-owner was bound to use all reasonable care to protect himself and to avoid damages, and to submit to the jury whether there was any known or reasonable way in which he could have lessened the injury.

Pennsylvania.— Gavigan v. Atlantic Refining Co., 186 Pa. St. 604, 40 Atl. 834; Robb v. Carnegie, 145 Pa. St. 324, 22 Atl. 649, 27 Am. St. Rep. 694, 14 L. R. A. 329.

Texas.— Umscheid v. San Antonio, (Civ. App. 1902) 69 S. W. 496 (holding that where, in an action for injury to land, it appeared that defendant had the right to remove the source of the injury, and there was evidence that it intended to do so, but no evidence of any temporary injury, an instruction that the jury must find for defendant if they believed that the source of injury would be removed and the land be restored to its former condition was not erroneous); Faulkenbury v. Wells, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 621, 68 S. W. 327; Brennan v. Corsicana Cotton-Oil Co., (Civ. App. 1898) 44 S. W. 588 (holding that an instruction that defendant was liable only for his own acts in maintaining a nuisance, and not for a nuisance resulting from the condition of other property adjacent to plaintiff's property, was proper, where there was evidence that such other property was kept in an offensive condition).

Virginia.— Chesapeake, etc., R. Co. v. Whitlow, 104 Va. 90, 51 S. E. 182; Cohen v. Bellenot, (1899) 32 S. E. 455, holding that where a complaint for nuisance alleged that the private sewer of defendant had an insufficient fall, whereby the sewage was collected and thrown upon plaintiff's property, to his great injury, and the only evidence showed that the fall was sufficient, an instruction that, if the sewer was so badly constructed as to affect plaintiff's property, he was entitled to recover, was improper.

See 37 Cent. Dig. tit. "Nuisance," § 130.

56. Learned v. Castle, (Cal. 1884) 4 Pac. 191 (holding that under Code Civ. Proc. § 625, authorizing the court to instruct the jury, if they render a general verdict, to find upon particular questions of fact, in an action for damages for a nuisance, it was proper to charge, where the jury found the existence of the nuisance, that they should award compensatory damages); Holbrook v. Griffis, 127 Iowa 505, 103 N. W. 479 (holding that in an action for damages for a temporary nuisance instructions authorizing a recovery of the difference between the fair and reasonable value of the use of plaintiff's property as it existed prior to the establishment of the alleged nuisance and after such establishment, etc., were proper); Ferguson v. Firmenich Mfg. Co., 77 Iowa 576, 42 N. W. 448, 14 Am. St. Rep. 319 (holding that an instruction that the measure of plaintiff's recovery was the difference between the "value of the use" of his premises as they would have been without the alleged nuisance and the "value of said premises" with such nuisance was erroneous).

57. Adams Hotel Co. v. Cobb, 3 Indian Terr. 50, 53 S. W. 478; Umscheid v. San Antonio, (Tex. Civ. App. 1902) 69 S. W. 496 (holding that where the pleadings in an action for injury to land are sufficient to authorize proof of temporary injury, but there is no evidence of any such injury, an instruction excluding damages for such injury is not erroneous); Neville v. Mitchell, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 89, 66 S. W. 579 (holding that where there is evidence in an action for sickness caused by a nuisance that the sickness was not caused, but only prolonged, thereby, the instructions should clearly state that under such facts plaintiff is not entitled to damages for the entire sickness, but only for the continuance thereof caused by the nuisance).

61. Comminge v. Stevenson, 76 Tex. 642, 13 S. W. 556, holding that an instruction that "a nuisance is anything that works hurt, inconvenience, or damage to another, either in his person or property," is not erroneous as ignoring the legal ingredient of a "violation of a right," as the jury would doubtless understand that to authorize a verdict for damages they must believe that the injury was inflicted in violation of plaintiff's right.

62. Shirely v. Cedar Rapids, etc., R. Co., 74 Iowa 169, 37 N. W. 133, 7 Am. St. Rep.

where they relate to matters not in issue,[63] or where they are argumentative in form;[64] and it is also proper to refuse requested instructions which are necessarily embodied in those already given.[65] Where an action for damages and the abatement of a nuisance is considered an action at law, the findings of the jury are not merely advisory.[66] Where the case has been tried on the theory that the injury complained of was caused by a nuisance there cannot be a recovery on the ground of defendant's negligence, although the evidence is sufficient to show negligence.[67]

13. JUDGMENT.[68] A judgment establishing the existence of a nuisance cannot be collaterally attacked in another action for the continuance of the same nuisance.[69] discomfort suffered by them[81] as well as for what he himself has suffered. There can be no recovery for injuries not shown to have been caused by the nuisance complained of,[82] nor is it proper to consider injuries which would not of themselves constitute the structure complained of a nuisance.[83] Neither can plaintiff be allowed damages for injuries which he might by reasonable diligence have prevented.[84]

b. Consequential Damages. It has been held that consequential as well as direct damages may be recovered in an action for a nuisance.[85]

c. Period For Which Damages Recoverable. Where the injury is permanent plaintiff may recover future or prospective as well as past damages;[86] but where the nuisance is of a temporary, recurrent, or removable character, prospective or future damages are not recoverable;[87] but plaintiff can recover damages only to the time of the commencement of the action,[88] unless he seeks in one action both equitable relief by an abatement of the nuisance and damages therefor, in which case damages may be awarded to the time of trial.[89] In a second action for a continuing nuisance[90] damages should be assessed for the period between the commencement of the first and the commencement of the second action.[91] Damages to the owner or occupant of land by reason of a diminution of the value of the use thereof caused by a neighboring nuisance must be confined to the time during which the nuisance existed.[92]

held that incidental benefits to plaintiff cannot be considered in assessing the damages.[98] But the prompt abatement of an alleged nuisance on complaint being made is a fact to be considered in mitigation of damages for its maintenance.[99]

f. Amount of Recovery — (1) ACTUAL DAMAGES. The measure of damages is compensation for the injury or loss sustained by plaintiff.[1] As a general rule the damages are measured by the depreciation in the market value of the property injured, where the injury caused by the nuisance is of a permanent nature,[2] and the decrease of the rental or usable value in case the injury is of a temporary or Canada.— Drew v. Baby, 1 U. C. Q. B. 438.

See 37 Cent. Dig. tit. "Nuisance," § 119.

Nuisance properly treated as permanent.— Where a railroad company has constructed its embankment in front of plaintiff's house in such a way that upon the occasion of each considerable rainfall the water accumulates in pools, and remains through a period of stagnation, until it dries up, and has refused, upon application, to put in a culvert to drain the water off, it is not error to treat the nuisance as a permanent one, and give damages for the depreciation of the property. Rosenthal v. Taylor, etc., R. Co., 79 Tex. 325, 15 S. W. 268.

Time as to which difference to be estimated.— Where defendant's construction and maintenance of a pool of water near plaintiff's land creates a nuisance, damaging the land, the measure of damages is the difference in the value of the property before the injury and immediately thereafter, and not at the time of the erection of the pool — the injury not having occurred till the waters stored therein receded, allowing the vegetation killed thereby to decay and give off offensive odors — or at the time of the trial; so that an instruction to find the damages at the difference in the value of the land with the pool and without it is erroneous, as authorizing the jury to find as the damages the difference in the value of the land with and without the pool at the time of the trial. The fact that plaintiff himself occupied the premises injured by a nuisance maintained by defendant does not prevent the depreciation of the rental value from affording the proper measure of damages. Michel v. Monroe County, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 47.

Loss of use.— The measure of damages to plaintiff's land because of a continuing nuisance is not the depreciation of market value, but the loss in its use, and such damages as may result therefrom. Vogt v. Grinnell, 123 Iowa 332, 98 N. W. 782.

Interest on diminution of value.— In an action for the diminished enjoyment of land caused by the discharge on it of filth from sewers, interest on the difference of values with and without the nuisance cannot be taken as the measure of damages, unless a sale was actually defeated. Moore v. Langdon, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 6.

The damages to a lessee of the property injured are measured by the usable value — the value of the use of the premises to the occupant — rather than by the rental value or the rent reserved in the lease. Smith v. Phillips, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 10.

Nuisance properly assumed not permanent. —In an action for damages resulting from the use of plaintiff's land and the land adjacent thereto as a dumping ground, where the jury are confined to the determination of the damage resulting from the nuisance arising from the noisome odors, it should be assumed that such damage will not be permanent, since it may be abated by the removal of the deposits or by the action of the elements. and the fact that the nuisance has been abated, although not a perfect defense, may lead to a discharge of the indictment with a merely nominal fine or an acquittal by consent of the prosecutor.[36]

3. Jurisdiction and Venue.[37] The jurisdiction of courts in prosecutions or penal actions for public nuisances is governed by the statutes and judicial system of the state where the prosecution is brought.[38] The prosecution may be in the county in which the nuisance is committed,[39] or the inhabitants of which are aggrieved or injured thereby.[40]

38. State v. Bell, 5 Port. (Ala.) 365 (holding that where the judge of a county court is vested by a private act of the legislature with power to abate a mill as a nuisance, on the happening of a contingency, this does not take from another court its ordinary jurisdiction to abate the nuisance by indictment); Johnson v. State, 2 Marv. (Del.) 372, 43 Atl. 256 (holding that under Rev. Code (1893), p. 300, authorizing any justice of the peace, on application, under oath, showing cause thereof, to issue his warrant to abate a nuisance, in order to give the justice jurisdiction the complaint must be made by an authorized member of the board of health); Wilson v. Com., 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 2 (holding that the city court of Lexington has the same jurisdiction of cases of nuisance which the circuit court had before the jurisdiction was changed to the city court, where no ordinance had been passed by the city); State v. Schaffer, 31 Wash. 305, 71 Pac. 1088 (holding that prosecutions for maintaining a nuisance are not actions for the abatement of a nuisance, so as to be within the exclusive jurisdiction of the superior courts, under Const. art. 4, §§ 6, 10).

39. Com. v. Lyons, 3 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 167, holding that an indictment for a nuisance erected on the waters of a stream in one county, which corrupts the waters in an adjoining county, can be tried in the county where the nuisance is erected.

43. Vason v. Augusta, 38 Ga. 542, holding that under Rev. Code, § 4478, providing that any person who shall erect or continue, after notice to abate, any nuisance which tends to annoy the community, etc., shall be indicted and punished, the indictable offense is complete on notice to abate.

The filing of a notice with the justice before whom proceedings are brought under Nev. Gen. St. § 290 et seq., is the very foundation of the proceeding. Wiggins v. Henderson, 22 Nev. 103, 36 Pac. 459, holding the notice filed to be insufficient.

47. St. Paul v. Hennessey, 38 Minn. 94, 35 N. W. 576 (holding that a complaint in a criminal proceeding alleging a building to be "dangerous, having been heretofore damaged by fire," is not sufficient under a criminal statute relating to buildings which are unsafe "so as to endanger life," or under a statute relating to buildings which are "specially dangerous in case of fire"); State v. Uralde Asphalt Paving Co., 68 N. J. L. 512, 53 Atl. 299.

Continuance.— In an indictment for causing a nuisance under Me. Rev. St. c. 164, § 7, it is not necessary to allege that the nuisance was continued. State v. Hull, 21 Me. 84.

48. Lippman v. South Bend, 84 Ind. 276 (holding that a complaint in a suit for a penalty for keeping a public nuisance, which charged that defendant kept a large quantity of hides, tallow, and other substances which emitted a disagreeable odor, did not show sufficient facts); State v. Sturdivant, 21 Me. 9; State v. Purse, 4 McCord (S. C.) 472 necessary that it should set out matters not pertinent to defendant's liability,[49] or negative matters of defense.[50] An indictment which is uncertain in its allegations as to the nuisance is bad.[51] The indictment need not be laid with such a continuando as will warrant an order of abatement in case of conviction, such order not being a necessary part of the judgment.[52] An indictment under a statute for maintaining a nuisance may charge all the various acts enumerated in the statute as constituting a nuisance.[53] A single count alleging a nuisance and describing the place of its existence does not charge two offenses.[54]

b. Public Character of Nuisance. It must be averred in the indictment or information that the nuisance maintained by defendant is public in its character,[55]

(holding that since a house is not in itself a public nuisance, an indictment for erecting or keeping a house which gives forth offensive odors must state in what respect it constitutes a nuisance, with respect to its location and the circumstances connected with its use).

In an information for the continuance of a nuisance previously erected by another person, the facts ought to be set forth circumstantially. State v. Brown, 16 Conn. 54.

Defects cured by plea of guilty.—A complaint in a prosecution for maintaining a nuisance, which states the annoyance caused merely in general terms, instead of by alleging specific facts, is cured by a plea of guilty. State v. Knowles, 34 Kan. 393, 8 Pac. 861.

49. State v. Eyermann, 115 Mo. App. 660, 90 S. W. 1168, holding that under Laws (1901), p. 73, § 1, declaring "the owners, lessees, occupants, managers or agents of any building" from which dense smoke is emitted to be guilty of a misdemeanor, an indictment which alleges that defendant is the "manager of certain buildings or premises for A & B," need not further allege, and the state need not prove, whether A & B is a corporation or a copartnership.

The ownership of the property defiled need not be alleged in an indictment for depositing noxious substances in the Providence river in violation of R. I. Gen. Laws (1896), c. 118, § 6. State v. Providence Gas Co., 27 R. I. 142, 61 Atl. 44.

50. Mergentheim v. State, 107 Ind. 567, 8 N. E. 568, holding that an indictment for creating a nuisance is not bad for failing to aver that the acts done by the accused were not authorized by a city ordinance passed under the proviso in Rev. St. § 2066.

Rep. 493, holding that where an indictment against a railroad for maintaining a nuisance by the erection of a bridge and approaches thereto was uncertain in its allegations as to whether the bridge complained of was erected across a turnpike for cars to pass over, or across the railroad for public travel, it was demurrable.

55. State v. Houck, 73 Ind. 37; Messersmidt v. People, 46 Mich. 437, 9 N. W. 485, holding that an information alleging that defendant polluted an ancient stream, thereby rendering the water unfit to drink, "to the common nuisance of the people," but failing to allege that the stream is one in which the public has rights, is insufficient.

Acts constituting misdemeanor at common law.— A count charging a person with "openly and publicly speaking with a loud voice, in the hearing of the citizens, &c., wicked, scandalous, and infamous words, representing men and women in obscene and indecent positions and attitudes," with the intention "to debauch, debase, and corrupt the morals of the youth as well as others," without averring that the offense is a common nuisance, is good, such offense being a misdemeanor at common law; and the precise words and attitudes need not be described. Barker v. Com., 19 Pa. St. 412.

A general conclusion in the indictment that the nuisance is "to the great injury," etc., "of all the citizens of the state," will not and that its noisome effects reach the public highways or the dwelling-houses of the citizens.[56]

c. Time of Offense. The time when the offense was committed should be stated with certainty,[57] and it should appear that the offense was committed before the indictment was laid,[58] and within the time limited by statute for the commencement of a prosecution therefor.[59]

d. Location of Nuisance. It is not necessary to specify the location of the nuisance,[60] further than to show that it is within the jurisdiction of the

See 37 Cent. Dig. tit. "Nuisance," § 209.

56. Com. v. Webb, 6 Rand. (Va.) 726, holding that to maintain a public prosecution for a nuisance for damming up and stagnating the waters of a creek, it is necessary to allege and prove that the obstructions placed in the creek produced the nuisance "in or near a public highway," or in some other place in which "the public" have a special interest.

Sufficiency.— Where it is charged that by reason of the noxious exhalations emitted from a building within the city, and carried by the wind over the city, the air was rendered corrupt and unhealthful, it will be assumed that the nuisance existed near the highways and dwellings of the city. State v. Uvalde Asphalt Paving Co., 68 N. J. L. 512, 53 Atl. 299.

"Roads and streets."—An indictment which alleges that defendant carried on an offensive trade "near unto divers roads and streets, and also near unto the dwelling houses of divers liege inhabitants of the State, there situate and being," sufficiently charges a public nuisance, as the words "roads" and "streets" are equivalent to public roads and highways. Horner v. State, 49 Md. 277.

Where the alleged nuisance is committed in carrying on a lawful trade which may or may not be a nuisance according to its location, an indictment which concludes merely "to the common nuisance of all good citizens," is not good, and therefore an indictment for a nuisance in keeping cattle-pens must conclude, "to the common nuisance of all persons there living and abiding, or of all there passing and repassing, and having the right to pass," or the indictment itself must show proximity to human habitations or highways, and the use of streams which would be damaged by their pollution. Com. v. T. J. Megibben Co., 101 Ky. 195, 40 S. W. 694, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 291.

Description of road.—An indictment for maintaining a nuisance so near a public road as to annoy the passengers thereon need only locate the nuisance and allege its proximity to the road, without describing the road by its name and termini. Com. v. McCormick, 5 Pa. Dist. 535.

57. Com. v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 82 S. W. 231, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 493; State v. Davis, 80 Me. 488, 15 Atl. 41.

The clear meaning of an allegation in a complaint that defendant kept and maintained a common nuisance "on the first day of August, 1886, and on divers other days and times between that day and the third day of September," is that defendant kept the nuisance on the 1st day of August, and on divers other days and times between said day and the 3d day of September, including said 3d day of September; and the complaint charges but one offense, committed during a single period of time, and is not bad for duplicity. Com. v. Sheehan, 143 Mass. 468, 9 N. E. 839.

Inclusion of day of verification.— Where an information charges the keeping of a common nuisance, and the day the information was verified and filed is included within the time of charging the offense, a motion to quash is properly overruled. State v. Youngberg, 70 Kan. 296, 78 Pac. 421 [following Manhattan v. Holbert, (Kan. 1902) 70 Pac. 1130].

Continuous nuisance.—A charge that defendant, on, etc., erected, and from thence hitherto continually maintained, etc., well charges a continuous nuisance. Baugh v. State, 14 Ind. 29. An indictment for a nuisance which alleges that the offense continued from a given day to the day before the day the indictment was returned is sufficient. Ashbrook v. Com., 1 Bush (Ky.) 139, 89 Am. Dec. 616.

58. State v. Schaffer, 31 Wash. 305, 71 Pac. 1088, holding that a complaint for the maintenance of a nuisance, under Ballinger Codes & St. Wash. §§ 3084, 3085, is insufficient if it alleges the commission of the acts constituting the offense in words of the present tense, without showing that any of the acts were committed prior to the time of filing the complaint.

court,[61] unless it is desired to obtain an order of abatement,[62] or the locality is an essential ingredient of the offense.[63]

e. Unlawfulness or Lack of Proper Precautions. It need not be directly alleged that the act or business complained of is conducted unlawfully or without proper care and precautions.[64]

f. Intent.[65] It has been held that an indictment for keeping a common nuisance need contain no allegation of evil intent.[66]

g. Formal Conclusion. It has been held that an indictment for a nuisance, which concludes, "to the common nuisance of divers of the Commonwealth's citizens," is insufficient, but it should be laid to the common nuisance "of all citizens of the Commonwealth residing in the neighbourhood," or "of all citizens," etc., "residing," etc., "and passing thereby."[67] But later authorities hold

The premises on which a nuisance is maintained may be identified by evidence aliunde, when not specifically described in the indictment for the maintenance of such nuisance. Jasper County v. Sparham, 125 Iowa 464, 101 N. W. 134 [following State v. Manatt, 84 Iowa 64, 51 N. W. 73].

Ohio.— State v. Jackson, 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 250, 2 West. L. Abatement on conviction see infra, VII, E, 11.

Insufficient description.— Where an indictment for a nuisance charged that defendant maintained "a certain mill-dam in, about and across a certain stream of water in said county called Elkbart river," the locality of the mill-dam was not stated with sufficient certainty to enable the sheriff to execute the order of abatement with certainty and without mistake. Sufficient description.— An indictment against a city for suffering a nuisance upon a vacant lot, which describes the lot as being "at the foot of Twelfth street and near the Licking river," is sufficiently specific as to the place of the nuisance. Newport v. Com., 108 Ky. 151, 55 S. W. 914, 21 Ky. L. Rep. 1591.

that an indictment need not conclude formally "to the common nuisance of all the people," etc., if it contain averments substantially equivalent thereto.[68]

7. ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE.[69] On the trial the proof must accord with the charges of the indictment, information, or complaint, and the issues in the case,[70] and a material variance between the allegations and the proof adduced in support thereof is fatal.[71] So, one who is indicted for creating a public nuisance cannot be convicted for continuing the nuisance, since these are distinct offenses.[72] On the trial of an indictment for establishing a noxious trade near certain dwellings, defendant may prove, in bar of the prosecution, under the general issue, that the dwelling-houses in the vicinity of the place were built after the establishment of the alleged nuisance.[73] In determining whether defendant is guilty the jury cannot consider annoyance emanating from parts of defendant's premises other than the building complained of.[74]

8. EVIDENCE.[75] The prosecution must prove all the elements of the offense,[76]

Proof held to accord with indictment.— Evidence under an indictment for committing a nuisance in a "public place" is sufficient where it shows pollution of a navigable river, which is a public highway, as a public highway is prima facie a "public place." State v. Wabash Paper Co., 21 Ind. App. 167, 48 N. E. 653, 51 N. E. 949. An indictment under Mass. Gen. Sts. c. 87, § 6, for keeping and maintaining a common nuisance, is supported by proof that the nuisance was kept and maintained for the space of two hours. Com. v. Gallagher, 1 Allen (Mass.) 592. An indictment for unlawfully keeping a tenement as a common nuisance, in violation of Mass. St. (1855) c. 405, § 1, is supported by proof of the use of any part of the tenement for the purpose, although it consists of several rooms. Com. v. Howe, 13 Gray (Mass.) 26. On an indictment for erecting a dam, whereby animal and vegetable substances were collected, and became offensive, and corrupted the water, it was sufficient to prove that the injury was caused by the rise and fall of the water in the pond, or from the action of the sun upon the vegetable substances growing on the margin, although the stream was not a public highway. People v. Townsend, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 479. Where the indictment charges that the acts complained of "became, were, and still are" a public nuisance, evidence of the existence of the nuisance at any time within two years prior to the date in the indictment is admissible. State v. Holman, 104 N. C. 861, 10 S. E. 758. Where an indictment for maintaining a nuisance charged that defendants fed a large number of hogs with "slop, fermented grain . . . and other filth," by means whereof a nuisance was created, and the evidence showed that the hogs were fed exclusively on slop, there was no variance. Com. v. Van Sickle, Brightly 69, 4 Pa. L. J. Rep. 104, 7 Pa. L. J. 104. Under an indictment charging that defendant did burn and melt crude arsenic for the purpose of making arsenic, whereby noisome and unwholesome smells did arise so that the air was greatly corrupted, evidence that cattle and trees in the neighborhood were poisoned by the particles of white arsenic which fell on the ground from the noisome vapor is admissible, although the white arsenic itself was free from smell. Reg. v. Garland, 5 Cox C. C. 165.

Redundancy of proof.— Where an indictment for maintaining a nuisance in the form of an unsafe building charged that the same was maintained on lots one and two, and the evidence showed that it extended over on to lot three, this was not a variance, but a mere redundancy of proof. A failure to prove the allegations to the extent charged is not a fatal variance. State v. Beal, 94 Me. 520, 48 Atl. 124, where the indictment charged that the whole of a piazza erected and maintained by defendant, and described by metes and bounds, was a nuisance, as obstructing a street, and the proof showed that only portions of the piazza were within the street.

Proof of corporate capacity of defendant.— In an information under Burns Annot. St. Ind. whether or not the evidence adduced is sufficient to support the charge against defendant.[86]

9. Trial.[87] The question as to whether the matters complained of amount to a nuisance is for the jury,[88] and should be submitted to them under proper instructions.[89] The jury may and perhaps should look to the evidence of the acts done, and the probable consequences thereof, rather than to the testimony of particular witnesses as to the effects of such acts upon them.[90] The matter of ordering a view by the jury is discretionary with the court.[91] It has been held that after a verdict of not guilty a new trial will not be granted on the ground that the verdict was against evidence, although the judge who tried the case reports that he is dissatisfied with the verdict.[92]

10. Sentence and Punishment. At common law the erection or maintenance of a nuisance is punishable by fine and imprisonment,[93] but as a general rule the punishment or penalty is regulated by express statutory provisions.[94] If several are indicted and the jury find one guilty and say nothing as to the others, judgment may be rendered against the one found guilty.[95] In a case where the whole fine imposed was less than the costs incurred by the prosecutors the court ordered that one third of the fine should go to them, and suggested that the government might, on application, order the remaining two thirds to be paid to them.[96]

11. ABATEMENT ON CONVICTION.[97] On conviction under an indictment for maintaining a public nuisance, the nuisance may be abated as part of the judgment, and the thing with which the nuisance is done may be destroyed;[98] but a warrant or order of abatement does not necessarily follow upon a conviction.[99] A judgment that a nuisance be abated can be recovered only where it appears that the nuisance is continued to the finding of the indictment.[1] Where the building or structure complained of is of itself a nuisance, the court will, if necessary, order its removal;[2] but a destruction of the structure complained of should not be ordered until it is conclusively established that no other measure is equally efficacious for the abatement of the nuisance,[3] and a building not in itself a nuisance cannot be destroyed because a nuisance is created therein.[4] Where the nuisance is a business, an order of court absolutely prohibiting its continuance, regardless of whether the objectionable features can be removed, is too broad;[5] and it has been held that where the use of a building constitutes a nuisance whose effects are merely immoral and intangible, such nuisance can be abated only by the administration of such punishment as will be likely to cause the guilty party to desist.[6] Upon conviction of a nuisance the court will not order the nuisance to be abated when such abatement might affect the interests of strangers to the proceedings.[7] Nor will an abatement be ordered when for any reason it cannot be lawfully carried into effect.[8] So an abatement cannot be ordered on the conviction of a mere employee[9] or lessee.[10] It has been asserted that the power to order a removal of the nuisance must be exercised at the time of imposing the punishment by fine and imprisonment and form part of such judgment,[11] but it has also been held that the order of abatement may be made at any time during the term at which defendant was convicted.[12] Where a defendant indicted for a nuisance allows judgment to go by default and is under no recognizance to appear for judgment, the court will not, in his absence, give judgment that the nuisance be abated, although notice has been left at his residence of the intention of the crown to pray for judgment.[13] In ordering the abatement of an immoral nuisance the court has no power to direct that defendant be committed to jail until the order is obeyed, but should first merely order the nuisance to be abated and then, on defendant's failure to obey the order, subject him to fine and imprisonment without further intervention of the jury.[14] In Canada it has been held that the proper judgment is that the nuisance be abated by defendant, and the court cannot issue an order directing the sheriff to abate the nuisance, but the only authority which can be given to the sheriff, commanding him to abate the nuisance, is by the writ de nocumento amovendo.[15]

8. As when a building is described as wholly a nuisance but not all of it is such. State v. Beal, 94 Me. 520, 48 Atl. 124, holding, however, that where, on an indictment for a nuisance consisting of the maintenance of a piazza in the street, the proof shows only a portion of such piazza to be situated in the street, the county attorney may properly enter a nolle prosequi as to so much of the building as is not a nuisance, and thus make the record of conviction the correct basis for an order of abatement, if such order is in other respects deemed proper and advisable.

12. Appeal.[16] It has been held that in cases of nuisance the state as well as defendant has the right to except to the decision of the trial court.[17] A record of a summary conviction, reciting that defendant had been convicted of a nuisance in keeping his premises in a certain ward in a city in such condition as to be offensive and a nuisance, contrary to statute, and adjudging him guilty of the offense charged, has been held insufficient on appeal, in not setting out with sufficient precision the facts on which defendant was convicted.[18] The judgment will not be reversed because the fine imposed may perhaps be larger than the facts warrant, where it is not obviously excessive or unreasonable.[19]

13. Costs.[20] Where defendant is acquitted it is improper to subject him to any part of the costs.[21] In Canada where the indictment is removed into the court of queens bench by the prosecutors, defendant is not liable for the costs, although he is convicted;[22] but where it is removed into such court on defendant's application, and he is convicted, costs are properly charged against him.[23] The prosecutor must show himself to be a party aggrieved in order to be entitled to costs.[24]

I. TERMINOLOGY.

A. Oath — 1. GENERAL DEFINITION. An oath may be defined as an avowal of truth before God,[1] or more exactly, an appeal to God to regard the truth of the words of him who swears,[2] and punish him if he utter falsehood.[3] In its broadest

1. State v. Washington, 49 La. Ann. 1602, 1603, 22 So. 841, 42 L. R. A. 553 (where an oath is defined as "an appeal to God by the witness affirming that he will speak the truth on the witness stand"); Blair v. Seaver, 26 Pa. St. 274, 277 (where an oath is called "a solemn appeal to the Creator of the Universe that the truth only shall be witnessed").

2. Cubbison v. McCreary, 2 Watts & S. (Pa.) 262, 263, defining an oath as "an appeal to the Supreme Being for the truth of what the party declares." And see the cases cited in the note following.

3. Blocker v. Burness, 2 Ala. 354, 355, where the court said: "An oath is a solemn adjuration to God, to punish the affiant if he swears falsely." Compare, however, Clin-sense it includes any form of attestation by which a party signifies that he is bound in conscience to perform an act faithfully and truthfully.[4]

2. Corporal Oath. The term corporal oath must be construed as applying to any bodily assent to the oath by the witness.[5]

3. Judicial and Extrajudicial Oath. A judicial oath is one that is taken in some judicial proceeding.[6] An extrajudicial oath or non-judicial oath is one that is taken outside of a judicial proceeding without special authority of law, but taken formally before a person having authority to administer an oath or affirmation.[7]

B. Affirmation. An affirmation is a solemn and formal declaration or assertion that an affidavit is true, that the witness will tell the truth, etc., this being substituted for an oath in certain cases.[8]

II. Essence of Oath.

A. At Common Law. The essential requisite of an oath at common law is belief by the witness or affiant in the existence of a God, who will punish him if he swears falsely,[9] and an appeal to such God as the rewarder of truth and the ton v. State, 33 Ohio St. 27, 33, where it is said: "The purpose of the oath is not to call the attention of God to the witness, but the attention of the witness to God; not to call upon him to punish the false-swearer, but on the witness to remember that He will assuredly do so. By thus laying hold of the conscience of the witness, and appealing to his sense of accountability, the law best insures the utterance of truth."

Other definitions are: "An appeal to God, by the witness, for the truth of what he declares, and an imprecation of divine vengeance upon him, if his testimony shall be false." Atwood v. Welton, 7 Conn. 66, 73.

avenger of falsehood.[10] But the belief need not be, inevitably, that of the religion of the bible,[11] and the oath of any person who holds this essential belief, whatever his sect or creed, is sufficient.[12]

B. Effect of Constitutional and Statutory Provisions. The tendency of modern constitutions and statutes is to abolish the religious test of the common law.[13] The religious belief of a person taking an oath may, however, be shown to impeach his credibility.[14]

III. WHO MAY ADMINISTER.

A. In General. If no particular officer is designated to administer an oath or affirmation in a particular case or for a particular purpose, any officer authorized to administer oaths or affirmations generally may do so;[15] but an officer cannot administer an oath to himself.[16] A statutory provision that certain officers may "administer oaths necessary in the performance of their duties" relates to matters filed with or business transacted before the officer in which an oath is required and in reference to which some duty is enjoined upon him.[17] Where an act of congress requires an oath to be administered, such oath, under the usage of the proper department of government, may be administered by a state officer

The sanction of the oath is a belief that the Supreme Being will punish falsehood; and whether that punishment is administered by remorse of conscience, or in any other mode in this world, or is reserved for the future state of being, cannot affect the question, as the sum of the matter is a belief that God is the avenger of falsehood. Blocker v. Burness, 2 Ala. 354, 355. The administration of an oath supposes that a moral and religious accountability is felt to a Supreme Being and this is the sanction which the law requires upon the conscience of a person, before it admits him to testify. 42. Arrington v. Wittenberg, 12 Nev. 99, holding that under 2 Comp. Laws, § 2995, providing that the county recorders of the several counties within the state are empowered to take and certify the acknowledgment and proof of all conveyances affecting any real estate or of any other written instrument, and 1 Comp. Laws, §§ 239, 243, providing that no proofs shall be granted, except on the oath or affirmation of a competent and credible witness, the county recorder is authorized to administer oaths and take and certify the proofs and proceedings to foreclose mechanics' liens.

Conable v. Hylton, 10 Iowa 593 (holding that a deputy sheriff has the same power as his principal to administer an oath to his garnishee, when required to do so by plaintiff); Dunlap v. McFarland, 25 Kan. 488 (holding that where a deputy sheriff serves an order of attachment he may administer the oath to the appraisers of the property attached, as he has the same power as the sheriff therein); Lambert v. De Santos, 10 La. Ann. 725 (holding that under Code Prac. art. 771, providing that the deputy sheriff may represent the sheriff in all duties confided by law to the latter, a deputy sheriff may administer an oath to the appraisers of property sold under a writ of seizure and sale). (Mass.) 153, 157 (where the court said: "It was also a rule of law, now adopted in practice, that a witness is to be sworn, according to the form which he holds to be the most solemn, and which is sanctified by the usage of the country or of the sect to which he belongs"); Riddles v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 46 S. W. 1058 (so holding as to a juror's oath, under the constitution); Edmonds v. Rowe, R. & M. 77, 21 E. C. L. 705.

On the bible.—It has been held that Roman catholic witnesses were properly required to swear by laying the hand on the bible while the oath was administered, and kissing the book afterward, while protestant witnesses swore in the usual form by holding up the hand, since it was due to no invidious distinction, but because the oath on the book was deemed more binding on the catholic conscience. Com. v. Buzzell, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 153.

Hebrew oath.—It was ordered that the oath of a Jew to an injunction bill be sworn according to the form and solemnities of the Jewish religion (Newman v. Newman, 7 N. J. Eq. 26), upon the Pentateuch (Anonymous, 1 Vern. Ch. 263, 23 Eng. Reprint 459), with hat on head (Sessenwein v. Palmer, 3 Quebec Pr. 110).

Gentoo oath.—Depositions sworn according to the form of the gentoo religion have been held good. Omychund v. Barker, 1 Atk. 21, 26 Eng. Reprint 15, 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 397, 22 Eng. Reprint 339, Willes 538.

Mahometan oath.—Upon the alcoran, with ceremony. Rex v. Morgan, Leach C. C. 64.

Chinese oaths.—Although a Chinaman stated that he believed in the christian God, it was held error to swear him by holding up the hand with the usual formula, when it appeared that he still held his native religion, especially as he further stated that the joss-stick burning was the true form of oath among the Chinese. State v. Chyo Chiagk, 92 Mo. 395, 4 S. W. 704. Chinese witnesses were sworn each by blowing out a lighted candle, and declaring that if he did not tell the truth he would be blown out in like manner. State v. Gin Pon, 16 Wash. 425, 47 Pac. 961. Chicken oath administered see Bow v. People, 160 Ill. 438, 43 N. E. 593. A Chinese witness knelt and broke a saucer, then the oath was administered as follows: "You shall tell the truth and the whole truth; the saucer is cracked and if you do not tell the truth, your soul will be cracked like the saucer." Reg. v. Entrehman, C. & M. 248, 41 E. C. L. 139.

Affirmation is not permitted, unless religious scruples of the witness against swearing are shown. Williamson v. Carroll, 16 N. J. L. 217; State v. Putnam, 1 N. J. Act (1903), c. 453, of an assignor for benefit of creditors, to a schedule of preferred debts, is not sufficient, no bible being used, as required by Code, § 3309, and it not appearing that the assignor had any con-to make an oath legal and binding.[46] In swearing an affidavit, a solemn or corporal oath has been held not essential.[47] If a statute lays down a particular form of oath or affirmation that form must be followed.[48] In many cases, however, it scientious scruples about taking an oath with a bible, but merely that he had no bible. Pearre v. Folb, 123 N. C. 239, 31 S. E. 475. Under Tex. Bill of Rights, § 5, providing that "all oaths or affirmations shall be administered in the mode most binding upon the consciences," and Rev. Civ. St. art. 370, providing that, unless a different meaning is apparent from the context, the word "swear," or "sworn," includes "affirm," one called as a juryman who refused to make oath touching his qualifications on account of conscience, but offered to affirm, should be allowed to affirm. Riddles v. State, (Tex. Cr. App. 1898) 46 S. W. 1058.

Quakers.—But as early as Lord Mansfield's time quakers were allowed to make solemn affirmation instead of taking an oath. Atcheson v. Everitt, Cowp. 382. And see Clarke v. Bradlaugh, 7 Q. B. O. S. 18. Where it appeared that the witness had a religion, he was not allowed to affirm. Nash v. Ali Khan, 8 T. L. R. 444.

Two forms of oath may be administered to the same witness. Bow v. People, 160 Ill. 438, 439, 43 N. E. 593 (holding that where, in addition to the usual oath, defendant's counsel moved that the "chicken oath" be also administered to the Chinese witnesses and the trial judge allowed those witnesses who were willing to take this form of oath to do so, on appeal it was held that defendant could not complain of a witness having thus been sworn in two ways as it was at his request that the extra oath was administered); State v. Gin Pon, 16 Wash. 425, 426, 47 Pac. 961.

In the absence of express statute, a witness is to be sworn in such form as he considers binding on his conscience. Gill v. Caldwell, 1 Ill. 53; Com. v. Jarboe, 89 Ky. 143, 12 S. W. 138, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 344.

C. 383, both holding that the oath must be in the statutory form, namely, by laying the hand on the book of the holy evangelists, and with the words "so help me God," kissing the book, unless the witness be shown to have religious scruples against that form.

47. McCain v. Bonner, 122 Ga. 842, 846, 51 S. E. 36 [quoting 2 Cyc. 16: "It is not essential . . . that affiant should hold up his hand and swear in order to make his act an oath, but it is sufficient if both affiant and the officer understand that what is done is all that is necessary to complete the act of swearing"]. See also AFFIDAVITS, 2 Cyc. 17 note 73.

Informality.— Where a person prepares the necessary papers to sue out a distress warrant, and takes them to a magistrate, and reads to him the affidavit which he has signed, and states to the magistrate that he will swear to the facts therein recited, and the magistrate signs it with the understanding that affiant's intention is to swear to the truth of the facts as stated in the affidavit, and returns the papers to the affiant properly attested, neither the affiant nor any third person can assert that the distress warrant is void because not based on an affidavit made by a person to whom an oath was legally administered. McCain v. Bonner, 122 Ga. 842, 51 S. E. 36.

Some unequivocal form of oath is always requisite. The mere delivery of an affidavit signed by the person delivering it to the officer for his certification, neither one saying a word, was held not such an unequivocal and present act in the presence of the officer as to bind the conscience and there was no oath; the court saying: "Some form of an oath has always been required, for the double reason that only by some unequivocal form could the sworn be distinguished from the unsworn averment," referring to statutory requirements, continuing, "A wide scope, a large liberty, is thus given to the form of the oath, but some form remains essential. . . . To make a valid oath, for the falsity of which perjury will lie, there must be in some form, in the presence of an officer authorized to administer it, an unequivocal and present act, by which the affiant consciously takes upon himself the obligation of an oath." O'Reilly v. People, 86 N. Y. 154, 157, 40 Am. Rep. 525.

Oath over telephone.— The administration of an oath over the telephone was held not to be good, although the officer purporting to administer it knew and recognized the voice of the person purporting to take the oath, under a statute requiring the mode most binding on the conscience of the individual, and another providing that affidavits "may be made before" certain officers. is held that a substantial compliance with the form prescribed by the statute is all that is necessary.[49] Whatever is not necessary may be regarded as surplusage.[50] An oral oath is sufficient unless a written oath is prescribed.[51] An oath is not sufficient unless administered with due authority.[52] An oath or affirmation on knowledge and belief has been held equivalent to swearing or affirming absolutely.[53]

V. EVIDENCE OF ADMINISTRATION.

The presumption is that, where an oath or affirmation was administered by a proper officer, it was properly administered.[54] Indeed a magistrate's certificate

Rep. 360, on the ground that in that case the words in question were regarded as part of the oath], holding that the omission of the words "So help me God," although those words were contained in a form of oath prescribed by statute, did not vitiate an oath under that statute, since such words were not a part of the oath, but only pointed out the manner of administering it.

A commissioner to take testimony without the state must follow the form of oath prescribed by the court out of which it is issued, although the statute of the state in which the oath is administered prescribes a different form of oath. Com. v. Smith, 11 Allen (Mass.) 243.

Sufficiency as foundation for charge of perjury.— "It is not enough that the officer has general authority to administer oaths, nor that his administering the particular oath was not unlawful in the sense of incurring a penalty by administering it," to make such oath a foundation of perjury if false. State v. McCarthy, 41 Minn. 59, 42 N. W. 599. The oath of assessors, to render a tax assessment valid, must be such as to furnish grounds for an indictment for perjury, if it is false. Shattuck v. Bascom, 105 N. Y. 39, 12 N. E. 283. Under the rule that an oath, to be sufficient, must be in such form as to furnish a foundation for an indictment for perjury if it is false, the test is whether it would authorize an indictment, not whether it would warrant a conviction. Ward v. Brooklyn, 32 N. Y. App. Div. 430, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 41 [affirmed in 164 N. Y. 591, 58 N. E. 1093]. See, generally, PERJURY.

has been held conclusive evidence of the proper administration of an oath or affirmation.[55] If the record shows that an official oath has been taken, it is enough without showing before what officer it was taken or in what official capacity he administered the oath.[56] Where the statute does not require a written oath or written evidence thereof, the taking of the oath may be shown by parol evidence.[57]

VI. OATHS OF QUALIFICATION.

Certain oaths are prescribed by constitution or statute by way of qualification for public office,[58] and for citizenship,[59] and such oaths must be taken as prescribed.[60]

I. DEFINITIONS.

The term "obscene" may be defined as something offensive to chastity, decency, or delicacy;[1] expressing or presenting to the mind or view something that delicacy and purity forbid to be exposed.[2] Indecency is an act against good behavior and a just delicacy.[3] Obscenity is such indecency as is calculated to promote the violation of the law and the general corruption of morals.[4]

II. NATURE AND ELEMENTS OF OFFENSES.

A. In General — 1. AT COMMON LAW. Whatever openly outrages decency, and is injurious to public morals, is a misdemeanor at common law, and is indictable as such.[5]

2. UNDER STATUTES. The statutes enacted upon the subject only operate as an enlargement of the scope of the term, and define it more specifically. They create no new offense.[6] Statutes against obscenity should receive reasonable construction, having regard to the manifest object had in view in their enactment.[7]

Other definitions are: "Impure, foul, filthy, offensive, disgusting." State v. Hazle, 20 Ark. 156, 159.

"Lewd; impure; indecent; calculated to shock the moral sense of man by a disregard of chastity or modesty." Black L. Dict.

"Offensive to chastity, something that is foul, or filthy, and for that reason is offensive to pure-minded persons." U. S. v. Clarke, 38 Fed. 732, 733; Bouvier L. Dict.

It includes on the one hand what is merely inauspicious, foul, or indecent, and on the other hand what is immodest and calculated to excite impure emotions or desires. U. S. v. Smith, 45 Fed. 476, 477; U. S. v. Loftis, 12 Fed. 671, 673, 8 Sawy. 194 [citing Worcester Dict.]; Anderson L. Dict.

Indecent signifies something more than indelicate and less than immodest — something unfit for the eye and ear. U. S. v. Loftis, 12 Fed. 671, 673, 8 Sawy. 194 [citing Worcester Dict.].

4. State v. Pfenninger, 76 Mo. App. 313, 317; U. S. v. Males, 51 Fed. 41, 42; Bouvier L. Dict.

Another definition is "the character or quality of being obscene; conduct tending to corrupt the public morals by its indecency or lewdness." Black L. Dict.

Scope of term.— Obscenity is applied to language spoken, written, or printed, and to pictorial productions, and includes what is foul, and indecent, as well as immodest, or calculated to excite impure desires. State v. Pfenninger, 76 Mo. App. 313; U. S. v. Loftis, 12 Fed. 671, 8 Sawy. 194.

As such a statute is highly penal, it ought not to be held to embrace language unless it is fairly within its letter and spirit. Thomas v. State, 103 Ind. 419, 2 N. E. 808; U. S. v. Males, 51 Fed. 41.

B. Indecent Exposure[8] — 1. IN GENERAL. Indecent exposure in a public place in such a manner that the act is seen or is likely to be seen by casual observers is an offense at common law.[9]

2. PUBLIC PLACE. The place where the exposure is made must be public.[10] What constitutes a public place within the meaning of this offense depends upon the circumstances of the case.[11] It is not necessary that the exposure should be made in a place open to the public; if the act is done where a number of persons can and do see it that is sufficient.[12] The offense is complete if it is committed in any place where an assembly of the public is collected,[13] although they have no legal right of access thereto.[14]

3. INTENT. It should appear that the exposure was not merely accidental, but intentional, at such time and place, and in such a manner as to offend against public decency;[15] but intent may be inferred from recklessness.[16]

4. OBSERVERS. An indecent exposure seen by one person only, and capable of being seen by one person only, is not an offense at common law. It is otherwise, however, if there are other persons in such a situation that they may be witnesses of the exposure.[17] In fact it has been held that it is not essential to the crime

8. By an "obscene exhibition of the person" is meant any offensive, disgusting, and indelicate presenting to view, show, or display of the person. State v. Hazle, 20 Ark. 156, 159.

Bathing near a frequented road or inhabited houses, from which the person may be distinctly seen, is an indictable offense at common law, and punishable as such. Rex v. Crunden, 2 Campb. 89, 11 Rev. Rep. 671; Reg. v. Reed, 12 Cox C. C. 1. It is no defense to such an indictment that there has been, as long as living memory extends, a usage to bathe at the place, and that there has been no exposure beyond what is necessarily incident to bathing. that anybody should have seen the exposure, provided it was intentionally made in a public place, and persons were present who could have seen if they had looked.[18]

5. Consent of Observer. The fact that an indecent exposure is made with the consent of the person in whose presence it is made does not affect the criminality of the act.[19]

C. Obscene Language — 1. At Common Law. The utterance of obscene words in public, being a gross violation of public decency and good morals, is indictable at common law.[20]

2. Under Statutes — a. In General. In some states it has been made a statutory offense to use abusive, insulting, or obscene language in or near a dwelling, or in the presence of females.[21]

b. Language Used. As a general rule words are obscene, vulgar, or profane, or not, according to the sense in which they are used; and it is necessary to show by other words coupled with them the sense in which they are used, to make a valid charge of using such language.[22]

c. Place of Uttering. The statutes usually provide that the language in question must be uttered in or near a dwelling-house, or upon the curtilage thereof, or in the presence of a female.[23]

d. Presence of Females. Since it is the protection of the persons who are particularly mentioned from insult that the statute is intended to secure, their pres-

Object of statute.— This statute does not stand upon the footing of statutes against public indecency. Its object is not to keep pure the public morals. It is intended to protect females from insult; to furnish to the friends of the female whose modesty has been unlawfully shocked, or whose feelings have been wounded, by the use in her presence of obscene and vulgar language, some other remedy than that which nature dictates, to wit, club law. And the statute is to be construed and understood in the light of its object. Dillard v. State, 41 Ga. 278.

Language held not abusive, insulting, or obscene: "I want to stay here awhile," addressed by a man to a woman. Stamps v. State, 95 Ga. 475, 476, 20 S. E. 241. "Look me in the eye: Are you satisfied with the man you married? I can whip any damn Groover of the name." Roberts v. State, 120 Ga. 177, 179, 47 S. E. 511. "You are a God damn low down son of a bitch," although profane, coarse, opprobrious, and abusive, inasmuch as the word "bitch," applied to a woman, does not, in its ordinary sense, import prostitution. ence, or the presence of some one of them, is as material to constitute the offense, as the use of the language, or the place at which it is used.[24] It need not be shown that the language was heard by the female in whose presence it was uttered.[25]

D. Obscene Publications, Prints, and Pictures — 1. At Common Law. The publication of an obscene book or print,[26] or the exhibition of an obscene picture,[27] is an indictable offense at common law.

2. Under Statutes — a. Newspapers. Statutes exist in many states prohibiting the publication and sale of newspapers devoted largely to the publication of scandals and accounts of lecherous and immoral conduct.[28] The gist of the offense is the massing of these immoralities in one publication for circulation, and demands that the paper shall be mainly or largely devoted to the publication of such matter.[29]

b. Pictures, Letters, and Communications.[30] It is frequently made an offense by statute to send an obscene letter or communication to a woman,[31] to sell obscene pictures and photographs,[32] or to make any indecent or obscene written composition designed to corrupt the morals of youth.[33]

Procuring with intent to publish.— It is a misdemeanor to procure indecent prints with intent to publish them (Dugdale v. Reg., Dears. C. C. 64, 1 E. & B. 435, 17 Jur. 546, 22 L. J. M. C. 50, 72 E. The words "largely devoted" do not necessarily imply that any certain percentage of the columns of the paper shall be filled with the prohibited matter, but they do imply that this shall be a prominent feature of the publication; that special attention shall be paid to the publication of scandalous items. In re Banks, 56 Kan. 242, 42 Pac. 693.

30. Having in possession (Fuller v. People, 92 Ill. 182), or having in possession with intent to sell, etc. (State v. McCarthy, 17 R. I. 370, 22 Atl. 282; State v. Pennington, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 506), any obscene picture or other obscene matter may be made an offense by statute.

31. See cases cited infra, this note.

An obscene communication is "sent," within the meaning of the statute, when it is put in the course of transmission by the accused with intent that it should reach the person to whom it is charged in the indictment to have been sent, provided that in fact it reaches such person (Larison v. State, 49 N. J. L. 256, 9 Atl. 700, 60 Am. Rep. 606); and the means of transmission are immaterial (Larison v. State, supra).

3. Test of Obscenity. The test which determines the obscenity or indecency of a publication is the tendency of the matter to deprave and corrupt the morals of those whose minds are open to such influences, and into whose hands such a publication may fall.[34] The question does not depend upon its being true or false.[35] So a proper test of obscenity in a painting or statue is whether its motive, as indicated by it, is pure or impure, whether it is calculated to excite in a spectator impure imaginations, and whether the other incidents and qualities, however attractive, are merely accessory to this as the primary or main purpose of the representation.[36]

4. Motive of Publication. As a general rule the character of a publication as obscene or otherwise is not to be determined by the motive of the owner in making the publication.[37] In the case of scientific and medical publications, however, the motive of the publication seems to enter into the offense. If spread broadcast among the community, such publications will be held obscene, although they may be perfectly proper for the use of members and students of the profession.[38]

E. Obscene Exhibitions.[39] An information will lie at common law for any public show or exhibition which outrages decency, shocks humanity, or is contrary to good morals.[40] An offensive and disgusting exhibition will constitute the offense, although there is nothing immoral or indecent in it, and the motive is innocent.[41] An exhibition offending against public decency is indictable under a statute making it a misdemeanor to maintain a public nuisance.[42]

III. Prosecution and Punishment.

A. Indictment and Information[43] — 1. In General — a. Indecent Exposure. When indecent exposure is made a statutory offense, an indictment charging the offense in the language of the statute is sufficient in all cases where the statutory definition states the material facts constituting the unlawful act.[44] Every word essential to the description of the offense must, however, be charged.[45] The indictment need not conclude "to the common nuisance of all the citizens," etc.[46] If the indictment fails to charge the statutory offense, it may nevertheless be good at common law.[47]

b. Obscene Language. Where the offense of using obscene language is statutory, an indictment therefor must aver every fact which the statute declares a constituent of it.[48] An indictment for using obscene language in the presence of a female need not show that it was heard by the female.[49] If the words charged are not obscene per se, the indictment must show by extrinsic averments that they were used in that sense and so understood by the female.[50]

c. Obscene Publications or Pictures — (i) At Common Law. In an indictment at common law for exhibiting an obscene picture, it need not be averred that the exhibition was public or that the house where the picture was exhibited is a nuisance; a statement that it was shown to sundry persons for money being sufficient.[51]

(ii) Under Statutes. An indictment under a statute for publishing, selling, or sending obscene books, papers, or letters is sufficient if it charges the offense in the words of the statute.[52] This is not so, however, where the statute does not

Intent.— An indictment for indecent exposure which alleges that defendant, devising and intending the morals of the people to debauch and corrupt, at a time and place named, in the presence of divers citizens, unlawfully, scandalously, and wantonly did expose to the view of said persons present, his body, sufficiently alleges the intent with which the act was committed. Com. v. Haynes, 2 Gray (Mass.) 72, 61 Am. Dec. 437.

Tending to debauch the morals.— Since the tendency to corrupt or subvert the morals was merely descriptive of the act necessary to constitute the offense at common law, and was no part of the offense itself, the addition of the words "tending to debauch the morals" in the statute under which the conviction is sought adds nothing to the common-law offense, and the omission of such words in the indictment is immaterial. so far individuate the offense as to give defendant certain information of what he is accused.[53] It is not necessary to aver or prove that defendant knew that the matter was indecent.[54]

d. Obscene Exhibitions.[55] Since an information will lie, at common law, for any public show or exhibition which outrages decency, shocks humanity, or is contrary to good morals, an averment in such information that it is an offense contrary to the statute may be rejected as surplusage, and will not vitiate.[56]

2. Description, Setting Out, or Filing Obscene Matter — a. Obscene Language. While it has been held that an indictment for using obscene language in the presence of females need not set out the language used,[57] the better rule is that enough of the language used should be set forth as is necessary to show that a crime has been committed.[58] An averment that the language is "unfit for allegation herein" may, however, excuse failure to set forth every word of the language used.[59] If, however, the language charged is not such as to convey a meaning in its nature obscene, extrinsic averments showing in what connection the words were uttered, or that they have a local or provincial meaning, must be made.[60]

b. Obscene Pictures. An indictment for having in possession or exhibiting an obscene drawing or picture need not particularly describe in what the obscenity consists.[61]

c. Obscene Publications. In framing an indictment for publishing or distributing an obscene publication, the obscene matter must be set out,[62] unless the publication is in the hands of defendant, or out of the power of the prosecution,[63] or the matter is too gross and obscene to be spread upon the records of the court,[64] either of which facts, if existing, should be averred as an excuse for failure to set out the same.[65] Such a description of the obscene matter should be made, however, as to identify the publication in which it appeared.[66]

d. Obscene Exhibitions. The information for an obscene exhibition must state particularly the circumstances in which the indecency exists, that the court may judge whether it is an offense within the statute or at common law.[67]

B. Evidence. The general rules as to presumptions and burden of proof,[68] the admissibility,[69] and the weight and sufficiency of the evidence[70] are applicable to this class of cases.

C. Variance. Every essential allegation in the indictment or information must be substantially sustained by the evidence adduced, or the variance will be fatal.[71]

United States.— U. S. v. Bennett, 24 Fed. Cas. No. 14,571, 16 Blatchf. 338.

See 37 Cent. Dig. tit. "Obscenity," § 11.

Refusal to set out discretionary.— The refusal of the court to require the prosecutor to file a copy of the matter on which the prosecution is based, where the indictment alleges that it is too obscene and indecent to be set out in the record, is within its discretion, and its action is not reviewable. Causing slave to appear indecently clothed. — To sustain an indictment for causing and permitting the slave to appear indecently clothed, it is not necessary to prove that the slave was exhibited in such state by any command of the master. That the master caused and permitted it may be inferred from circumstances. Britain v. State, 3 Humphr. (Tenn.) 203.

Presumption of knowledge of obscenity see supra, note 54.

Obscene pictures — Use and circulation by others.— Evidence as to the use of similar pictures in commerce or trade is inadmissible on behalf of defendant in a prosecution for circulating an indecent picture, since the use of such pictures by others does not palliate defendant's offense. Montross v. State, 72 Ga. 261, 53 Am. Rep. 840; State v. Ulsemer, 24 Wash. 657, 64 Pac. 800.

Obscene language — Evidence of hearing by others.— On the trial of a person charged with using abusive, insulting, or obscene language in the presence of a female, a witness who was present, or near enough to hear what was said, may testify that he did not hear defendant use the language charged. Cox v. State, 76 Ala. 66.

Obscene publications — Explanation of language used.—Parol evidence is not admissible to explain the language used in the matter complained of. It must be judged on its face and the context. Com. v. Havens, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 545; Com. v. Landis, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 453.

Authorship of communication.— Where the authorship of an obscene communication is in dispute, a conversation between the accused and third persons, tending to connect the accused with the contents of the communication, is competent evidence to connect him with the authorship of it. But a charge made against the accused in the same conversation, having no relation to the subject-matter of the communication, is incompetent. Larison v. State, 49 N. J. L. 256, 9 Atl. 700, 60 Am. Rep. 606.

Indecent exposure.— An allegation that the exposure was made in the presence of divers persons is satisfied by proof that it took place in their vicinity, and so that it might have been seen. State v. Roper, 18 N. C. 208. An indictment charging the exposure to have been committed on a highway is not sustained by evidence that it was committed in a place near the highway, although in full view of it. Reg. v. Farrell, 9 Cox C. C. 446. An indictment that defendant made an obscene exhibition of the person of another is not sustained by proof that he placed an obscene writing upon the clothes worn by another. Tucker v. State, 28 Tex. App. 541, 13 S. W. 1004.

Obscene language.— In a prosecution for the utterance of obscene language in public, it is not necessary that the words be proven

D. Questions For Jury — 1. Obscene Language. In a trial for using insulting or obscene language in the presence of a female, it is for the jury to determine whether the language was of the character charged.[72]

2. Obscene Pictures. Whether the pictures are obscene is a question for the jury, to whom they shall be exhibited.[73]

3. Obscene Publications. While it has been held that the question whether or not a particular publication is obscene is for the court,[74] the better rule undoubtedly is that it is for the jury, under instructions from the court as to the meaning of the words.[75]

E. Instructions. The general rules covering the giving of instructions to the jury[76] are applicable in prosecutions for obscenity. A charge omitting an ingredient of the offense,[77] withdrawing a question of fact from the jury,[78] or assuming a fact not established by the evidence[79] is erroneous and should not be given. If, however, an erroneous instruction could not have prejudiced defendant, it affords no ground of exception.[80] A request to charge, correct in point of law, applicable to the case made by the evidence, and not covered by any charge given, is improperly refused.[81]

IV. Forfeiture and Destruction of Obscene Matter.

Obscene pictures and publications are a common nuisance,[82] and may be destroyed when the offense of publication or exhibition has been established.[83] precisely as alleged in the indictment, since to do so would in most cases insure impunity to the offender, because almost everyone not abandoned to all sense of decency would instinctively turn away his ear from hearing such revolting indecency. Bell v. State, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 42.

Obscene pictures and publications.— There is a fatal variance between an indictment charging the posting of obscene pictures on a dwelling and evidence that they were posted on an out-house near it. Gober v. State, 140 Ala. 153, 37 So. 78. An indictment alleging that defendant printed and published obscene pictures of nude women is not sustained by proof of only partial nudity. Com. v. Dejardin, 126 Mass. 46, 30 Am. Rep. 652. An information charging one with having procured a certain obscene picture of herself for the purpose of exhibition, loan, and circulation is not sustained by evidence tending to show merely that she sat for such a negative, there being nothing to show her purpose in doing so. People v. Ketchum, 103 Mich. 443, 61 N. W. 776, 50 Am. St. Rep. 383, 27 L. R. A. 448.

72. Carter v. State, 107 Ala. 146, 18 So. 232.

Provocation.— Under a statute providing a penalty for any person who shall, without provocation, use obscene language in the presence of a female, it is a question for the jury whether the provocation was sufficient to excuse the language used. Collins v. State, 78 Ga. 87.

73. People v. Muller, 32 Hun (N. Y.) 209, 2 N. Y. Cr. 279 [affirmed in 96 N. Y. 408, 48 Am. Rep. 635, 2 N. Y. Cr. 375], holding further that the fact that they are copies of pictures publicly exhibited in other countries is immaterial as matter of defense.

75. Com. v. Landis, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 453; U. S. v. Smith, 45 Fed. 476 (holding, however, that it is within the province of the court to construe the objectionable document so far as necessary to decide whether a verdict establishing its obscenity would be set aside as against evidence and reason); U. Sending obscene communication to female against her consent.— Where a statute makes the offense of sending an obscene communication to a female indictable only when done against her consent, the question of consent is one for the jury. I. DEFINITION.

The phrase "obstructing justice" means impeding or obstructing those who seek justice in a court, or those who have duties or powers of administering justice therein.[1]

1. U. S. v. McLeod, 119 Fed. 416.
"Oppose an officer."— As used in a statute declaring it an offense to "obstruct, resist, or oppose" an officer in the discharge of his duty, the term "oppose" imports force; resistance to the officer himself, and has practically the same meaning as "obstruct" or "resist." It does not apply to mere opposition to the process to defeat its execution. Davis v. State, 76 Ga. 721, 722. But compare State v. Morrison, 46 Kan. 679, 689, 27 Pac. 133, substantially approving, as it seems, a charge to the jury, concerning a like statute and, in part, as follows: "Opposing: That might be done in various ways; by ordering away bidders; giving notice to the bidders that the title was not good; that the sheriff had no right to sell, and various things of that sort, would be within the meaning of this clause, opposing the sale or resisting an officer in the execution of a writ." Of the whole charge it was said: "Some portions of these instructions may not be technically correct, and yet, taking the whole of the instructions together, we do not think that they were misleading or erroneous as to anything material in the case, and certainly not so misleading or erroneous as to require a reversal of the judgment." But there had been acts on the part of defendants tending to provoke a quarrel with the officer, as well as acts tending to obstruct the sale.

II. OFFENSES REGARDED AS FORMS OF OBSTRUCTING JUSTICE.

A. Resisting or Obstructing Execution of Process — 1. INDICTABLE AT COMMON LAW. Any obstruction of legal process by active means, or by the omission of legal duty is, at common law, indictable as a misdemeanor.[2]

2. ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE — a. Officers or Persons Resisted. To constitute the offense, the officer[3] or person[4] resisted or obstructed must, at the time and place, be authorized to execute the process in the execution of which he is resisted or obstructed.

2. State v. Hailey, 2 Strobh. (S. C.) 73; State v. Lovett, 3 Vt. 110; Rex v. Steventon, 2 East 362.

In Canada it is a criminal offense under Cr. Code, § 169 (a), to resist or wilfully obstruct any public officer, that is, any inland revenue or customs officer, officer of the army, navy, marine, militia, royal northwest mounted police, or other officer engaged in enforcing the laws relating to the revenue customs trade or navigation of Canada, section 2 (29), in the execution of his duty, or any person aiding him; or, (b) any peace officer, that is, mayor, warden, reeve, sheriff, deputy sheriff, sheriff's officer, justice of the peace, warden keeper or guard of a penitentiary, the gaoler or keeper of any prison, any police officer, police constable, bailiff or other person employed for the preservation and maintenance of the public peace, or for the service or execution of civil process, section 2 (26); or (c) any person engaged in the lawful execution of any lawful distress or seizure.

3. Vince v. State, 113 Ga. 1068, 39 S. E. 313; Bowers v. People, 17 Ill. 373; People v. McLean, 68 Mich. 480, 36 N. W. 231.

Officers held authorized.— The deputy marshal is an officer of the United States within the purview of Rev. St. § 5398, making it an offense for a person knowingly and wilfully to obstruct, resist, or oppose any officer of the United States in the service of process. U. S. v. Martin, 17 Fed. 150, 9 Sawy. 90. The keeper of a state jail in which a person bound over by a United States commissioner to await the action of the federal grand jury is confined, with the consent of the state, is, with respect to the keeping and custody of such person, an officer of the United States, within the meaning of a statute making it an offense to resist or oppose any officer of the United States in the execution of process. U. S. v. Martin, supra. A person who knowingly and wilfully resists a receiver, acting under an order of a court of competent jurisdiction, and having in his possession a properly certified copy of the order, is guilty, under Iowa Code, § 3960, of resisting an officer authorized by law to execute a legal order. State v. Rivers, 64 Iowa 729, 12 N. W. 792. A special deputy employed and authorized by the sheriff to execute a particular process is "an officer of the State" within the meaning of Ala. Code, § 4137, making it an offense to resist such officer in the execution of process. Andrews v. State, 78 Ala. 483. Although the statute requires the sheriff's appointments to be approved and recorded, yet the sheriff has a common-law right to appoint a special deputy to serve a warrant, of which he has not been deprived by such statute, and resistance to such deputy in serving the warrant constitutes the offense of resisting an officer in the execution of process. Putman v. State, 49 Ark. 449, 5 S. W. 715.

Officers held to be unauthorized.— A sheriff cannot authorize his under sheriff to arrest one for whom a warrant for a misdeameanor has been issued, so as to make the person charged liable for resisting arrest, where the sheriff keeps the warrant in his own possession and is out of sight and hearing at the time of the attempted arrest. People v. McLean, 68 Mich. 480, 36 N. W. 231. Under a special act creating a city court and providing for the appointment of a sheriff thereof, such officer cannot legally execute process issued from other courts or by a judicial officer other than the judge of the city court, and hence an accusation for obstructing the execution by such sheriff of a warrant from a justice of the peace cannot be sustained. Vince v. State, 113 Ga. 1068, 39 S. E. 313. A road supervisor is not such an officer as is referred to in a statute against resisting officers in the service of process, the statute contemplating only such officers as are authorized to execute legal process. State v. Putnam, 35 Iowa 561.

4. Bowers v. People, 17 Ill. 373.

Persons authorized.— When a posse comitatus has been duly called out by the sheriff, resistance to any member thereof, acting under his authority, is resistance to the sheriff, and constitutes the offense of resisting an officer in the execution of process. Bonneville v. State, 53 Wis. 680, 4 N. W. 427. A member of the Indian police, although not an officer of the United States, is included among the other persons who may be authorized to serve writs of process, within the last clause of Rev. St. § 5398, making it an

b. Knowledge and Intent. Where the statute, in defining the offense, employs the words "knowingly" and "wilfully," it must appear that defendant knew the contents of the process and resisted its execution with an evil intent.[5]

c. Process Resisted. An indictment will not lie where it appears that the alleged act or acts of resistance were done after the process had spent its force and was functus officio.[6] And resisting or obstructing the execution of process can only take place where the officer was actually armed with process for execution at the time of the alleged resistance or obstruction.[7] Where the statute makes it an offense to resist or obstruct the execution of any process or warrant, it embraces every species of process, legal and judicial, whether issued by the court in session, or by a judge or magistrate acting in his judicial capacity out of court.[8] Where the process or warrant appears on its face to have issued from competent authority and with legal regularity, it is an indictable offense to interfere with or obstruct the officer executing it,[9] notwithstanding any error or irregularity in the previous issuing of the same,[10] or any imposition practised upon the court or magistrate in obtaining it.[11] But where the process or warrant shows the illegality upon its face it affords no protection to the officer executing it, and it is not an offense to offense to resist the execution of legal process. U. S. v. Mullin, 71 Fed. 682. A resistance to a special custodian of attached property, who is employed by a marshal for such custodian, although not a regularly appointed sworn deputy, is resistance to the marshal within the meaning of a statute relative to the resistance to an officer while executing process. A written order by an Indian agent, acting in pursuance of instructions from the interior department, for the purpose of fulfilling the duty of the government to protect the Indians in the use and occupancy of their reservations, is a legal writ or process within the meaning of Rev. St. § 5398, imposing a penalty for resisting the service of such a writ or process. U. S. v. Mullin, 71 Fed. 682.

A distress warrant, issued for the purpose of collecting taxes under the internal revenue law, is not a legal process within the meaning of the act of April 30, 1790, section 22, in relation to resisting officers in the service of process, such act protecting nothing but process issued by courts, magistrates, or commissioners of the United States. U. S. v. Myers, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 15,847.

Instances.— Thus the person resisting or obstructing an officer is none the less indictable because the warrant recited that a complaint had been made, but none was annexed to, or accompanied, the warrant (State v. Weed, 21 N. H. 262, 53 Am. Dec. 188), or because the libel may not have been sufficient to authorize the warrant of attachment against a vessel (U. S. v. Tinklepaugh, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,526, 3 Blatchf. 425).

interfere with or obstruct him while so doing.[12] And it has been held that the retaking of possession by the vendor under a contract for the conditional sale of chattels is not within the term "lawful distress or seizure" as used in a statute making it an offense to resist or wilfully obstruct any person in making any lawful distress or seizure, and that an obstruction of the vendor's bailiff in regaining possession is not an offense within such provision.[12a]

d. Time of Resistance. The alleged acts of resistance or of obstruction must have been done while the officer was executing, or attempting to execute, the process.[13]

e. Mode of Resistance — (I) Whether Forcible. Where the statute limits the offense to resistance alone, it must appear that the accused was personally present and resisted the officer's execution of process by more or less forcible means.[14] Hence, while it is enough that the officer was prevented by the exercise of personal violence on the part of the accused,[15] yet mere threats,[16] unless accompanied by a present ability and apparent intention to execute them,[17] do not constitute the offense. But where the statute denounces wilful acts of obstruction, as well as of resistance, its violation is established by proof that the accused caused any impediment or hindrance to be interposed to the execution of the process,[18] although not personally present and actually coöperating in the act of obstructing.[19] It must appear, however, that the accused in some manner and at some stage aided or abetted the act of obstructing.[20]

(II) Direct or Indirect. If the statute denounces resistance alone, it contemplates that execution of the process shall be prevented by the exercise of direct means,[21] and it is not violated by indirectly defeating and circumventing the officer in the execution of process,[22] as where property is concealed or removed.[23]

Instances.— Thus the absence of a seal essential to the validity of process (State v. Curtis, 2 N. C. 471), or the failure in a warrant to state an offense (Fulkerson v. State, 43 Tex. But where the statute denounces also wilful acts of obstruction, the employment of direct means is not necessarily implied,[24] and it is violated whenever execution of process is prevented by interposing indirect or circuitous impediments.[25]

f. Services or Execution Resisted — (i) In General. Holding attached property after seizure,[26] or delivering property to purchaser at a sale under execution,[27] is a part of the execution of process, and a person who resists or obstructs an officer thus holding or delivering property commits the statutory offense.

(ii) Arrest Being Made in Unlawful Manner. Although the offense of resisting the execution of process is not committed by resisting an arrest being made in an unlawful manner,[28] yet, even where an arrest is being made in an unlawful manner, one who forcibly attacks, from motives of revenge and not of self-defense, the officer making such arrest, is guilty of resisting him.[29]

(iii) Levy on Exempt Property. A debtor may, without rendering himself liable for resisting or obstructing the execution of process, use reasonable force to resist the attempt of an officer to a levy, by virtue of an attachment, on exempt property.[30] So too where exempt property, the attachment of which is forbidden by statute, is taken by an officer, the owner may use reasonable force to retake the same.[31]

(iv) Levy on Property of Third Person. Although the view obtains in some jurisdictions that the owner of personal property may maintain his possession, using no more force than is necessary, as against an officer who attempts to seize the property by virtue of process directed against another, and not make himself amenable to prosecution for resisting or obstructing the execution of process,[32] yet the view, supported by the weight of authority, is that the owner of property who maintains his possession by force against an officer attempting to seize it under lawful process against another, where the officer is acting in good faith,[33] and on reasonable grounds to believe the property to be that of the debtor,[34] commits the offense of resisting or obstructing the execution of process.

(v) Levy on Sunday. A writ of replevin conveys no authority to an officer to seize property on Sunday, and a recapture on the same day of the property so seized does not constitute the offense of resisting or obstructing the execution of process.[35]

an officer while executing, or attempting to execute, legal process is indictable therefor.[36] Thus where an officer wilfully levies on personalty by process against the party in whose possession it is, interference with such officer by a third person claiming to own the property renders him guilty of the offense.[37]

B. Refusal to Assist in Execution of Process. A private person duly summoned by an officer having legal authority to assist him in the execution of process is indictable for refusing to obey the summons,[38] unless it appears, from all the circumstances, that an attempt to execute the process, or to aid therein, would have been futile, as well as dangerous, to the life and limb of such private person.[39]

C. Obstructing or Interfering With Officer in the Performance of His Duty — 1. Person Resisted Must Be Officer. To make out the offense of resisting or obstructing an officer in the discharge of his duty, it must be shown that the person so resisted was an officer.[40]

2. Person Resisted Must Be Performing Official Duty. To constitute the offense, it must appear that the officer at the time of the alleged resistance or obstruction was actually performing a duty pertaining to his office,[41] and an act which may, in its remote consequences only, prevent the officer from performing his official duty does not constitute the offense.[42] If he was attempting to perform a duty not enjoined by law upon him and peculiar to his office,[43] or was acting, in the given case, without the necessary legal process,[44] one who opposes him therein is not guilty of the offense. But when it clearly appears that the officer was, when obstructed, in the performance of a duty enjoined on him by law, the person who so obstructed him is guilty of the offense.[45]

3. Mode of Resisting. To constitute the offense it is not necessary that the officer should be assaulted, beaten, or bruised.[46]

D. Obstructing or Impeding Administration of Justice. In the United States it is made an offense by statute to impede or obstruct, by threats of violence, the due administration of justice in any court of the United States.[47] If the unlawful act, done with reference to a particular cause pending or contemplated to be brought before a United States court, does not obstruct the administration of justice therein, no offense is committed, although the evil intent of the unlawful act may militate against the administration of justice in some other cause.[48] In Canada it is made an offense by statute to influence or attempt to influence, by threats or bribes, or other corrupt means, any juryman, whether sworn as such or not, or for a juryman to accept any corrupt consideration on account of his conduct as a juryman, or to wilfully attempt in any other way to obstruct or pervert or defeat the course of justice.[48a]

E. Dissuading or Preventing Witness From Attending or Testifying — 1. Indictable at Common Law. It is an indictable offense, at common law, to dissuade or prevent,[49] or to attempt to dissuade or prevent,[50] a witness from attending or testifying upon the trial of a cause.

2. Elements of Offense. The gist of the offense is the wilful and corrupt attempt to interfere with and obstruct the administration of justice.[51] An attempt, whether successful or not, to dissuade or prevent a witness from attending or testifying upon the trial of a cause, evidenced by distinct and unequivocal acts, is indictable.[52] It is immaterial that the person dissuaded by defendant had not been regularly summoned to attend as a witness, if defendant knew that such person was a material witness and under obligation to attend.[53] The materiality of the testimony of the person dissuaded from attending as a witness is not essential to the offense.[54] No physical act of intervention is necessary to constitute the offense, but it may be committed by persuasion, advice, or threats.[55] Intentionally and designedly to get a witness intoxicated, for the express purpose of preventing him from attending and testifying, is an indictable offense.[56] The mere giving of money by defendant to another for the use of a third person, and to induce him to absent himself as a witness from the trial, has been held not to constitute the offense, unless it appears that there was some communication between such third person and the person to whom the money was given.[57]

F. Refusal of Witness to Answer Questions. A refusal by a witness to answer a pertinent and proper question in a judicial investigation might be a serious obstruction of public justice, and, where it is charged that it impeded and obstructed the officer conducting the investigation in the due and legal execution of his office, it seems that it is indictable.[58]

G. Procuring False Evidence. To constitute the crime of procuring false evidence there must be an intent to procure false evidence for a fraudulent and deceitful purpose, and hence allowing it to be done through carelessness, however gross, without such intent cannot constitute the offense.[59]

A. Prosecution — 1. Indictment, Information, or Complaint — a. Resisting or Obstructing Execution of Process — (I) In General. Where the words of the statute are descriptive of the offense of resisting or obstructing the execution of process, the indictment must expressly charge the facts that constitute[60] and the omission of any fact necessary to constitute the offense is fatal.[61]

(II) Particular Averments — (A) Knowledge of Capacity in Which Officer Acted. Unless the statute defining the offense of resisting or obstructing the execution of process contains the word "knowingly," or some equivalent term,[62] it is not necessary for the indictment to allege that defendant knew the capacity in which the officer acted, or pretended to act, in the execution of the process mentioned in the indictment.[63]

(B) Process — (1) In General. The indictment must show what the process was,[64] so identifying it by description as to inform the accused of what he is called upon to answer;[65] but it is not necessary to set out the process in hæc verba.[66]

(2) Legality. The indictment in a prosecution for obstructing the execution of process must, to be sufficient, show by proper averments that the process was legal,[67]

Knowledge insufficiently alleged.— An indictment charging that one did "unlawfully and wilfully" resist an officer in serving process is not sufficient, under Iowa Code, § 4899, declaring a punishment if one "knowingly and wilfully" makes such resistance; "knowingly" not being synonymous with "wilfully," and its omission not being supplied. not only in form and purpose,[68] but as emanating from some court or officer empowered to issue it.[69]

(3) Date of Issuance and Against Whom Issued. If the statute provides that the process may be described generally, the indictment need not state the date of its issuance[70] or against whom issued.[71]

(4) Indorsement. If, to enable the officer to execute it, the writ must be indorsed, an allegation of indorsement which is part of the writ which the officer was executing is sufficient.[72]

(5) Return. It is not necessary to allege that the writ has been duly returned.[73]

(6) Authority of Officer to Execute. It seems that an averment that the officer resisted or obstructed was duly authorized to serve and execute the process suffices as an allegation of authority to serve such process.[74]

(7) In Officer's Hands to Be Executed. It is not necessary that there should be an express averment that process was in the hands of the officer for the purpose of being executed.[75]

(c) Resistance. An indictment which omits to charge that the officer was resisted in attempting to execute legal process is bad.[76] There is a conflict of authority as to whether the indictment must allege the particular manner and method by which the officer was resisted or obstructed, some cases holding that it suffices to allege the offense substantially in the words of the statute,[77] and others holding that an indictment is bad which does not charge by proper averments the particular manner and method of resistance or obstruction.[78]

Sufficiency of averment.— What particular averments are necessary to show this authority to issue the process alleged to have been obstructed depends upon the character of the tribunal or officer issuing it. U. S. v. Stowell, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,409, 2 Curt. 153. If the officer who granted the process had by law only a limited and special authority, depending, for its existence, on particular facts, every fact necessary to the existence of that authority must either be averred in the indictment (People v. McLean, 68 Mich. 480, 36 N. W. 231; U. S. v. Stowell, supra) or appear on the face of the process therein set forth (U. S. v. Stowell, supra).

Aiding want of averment.— In an indictment under the act of April 30, 1790, section 22, for obstructing, etc., an officer of the United States in the discharge of process, the want of an averment of the facts showing that the commissioners were authorized to issue the warrant cannot be aided by referring to the records of the court where the indictment is brought; it appearing that such court appointed the commissioners whose authority is in question. b. Refusal to Assist in Execution of Process. An indictment charging defendant with refusing to assist an officer in his service of process must allege that defendant was informed of the official character of the person requesting his assistance.[79] Likewise the authority of the person requesting defendant's assistance to execute the process must be set forth in the indictment.[80] But if the information alleges that defendant knew that the officer was serving process and that the persons with him were his assistants, it is unnecessary to allege that the officer had asked such persons to assist him or that he needed assistance.[81]

c. Resisting or Obstructing Officer in Performance of Official Duty — (I) In General. An indictment for resisting or obstructing an officer in the performance of his duty must set forth all the facts necessary to constitute the offense.[82] It has been held insufficient to charge the offense in the language of the statute.[83]

(II) Particular Allegations. Where the statute defining the offense does not use the word "knowingly," or its equivalent, it is not necessary to allege knowledge that the person resisted or obstructed was an officer;[84] but where knowledge is a part of the statutory description of the offense, the indictment must allege that the accused knew the person to be an officer when resisting or obstructing him.[85] As to whether the particular official act or acts obstructed must be specifically averred, there is a conflict of authority, it being held in one jurisdiction that such an averment is unnecessary,[86] and in other jurisdictions that, unless the statute defining the offense is full and explicit, an indictment is defective, in this regard, which charges the offense simply in the language of the statute.[87] In some jurisdictions the view obtains that, unless the statute defining the offense is full and explicit,[88] the indictment must set forth the act or acts of resistance or obstruction,[89] while in other jurisdictions it is held that, in this regard, charging the offense substantially in the language of the statute is sufficient.[90]

(III) Variance. An erroneous allegation in the indictment respecting the name of the officer resisted does not constitute a fatal variance.[91] So too an erroneous allegation respecting the official title of the officer is immaterial, if it appears that he was authorized to perform the duty in which he was resisted.[92]

d. Dissuading or Preventing Witness From Attending or Testifying. Where the statute makes it an offense to attempt to bribe a witness to absent himself from a trial, it is not necessary to charge in the indictment that the attempt to bribe was with intent to impede and obstruct the due course of justice.[93] It is necessary to allege in the indictment that a cause was pending requiring the person dissuaded to attend as a witness.[94] The indictment must affirmatively designate the witness dissuaded or prevented from attending or testifying.[95] It need not allege that the person dissuaded or prevented from attending as a witness had been regularly summoned as such,[96] or that a subpœna or other process for that purpose had been issued.[97] Nor need it allege in whose behalf the person dissuaded or prevented from appearing before the court as a witness was summoned.[98] So it is not necessary to aver the materiality of the testimony of the person dissuaded from appearing before the court as a witness.[99] And the means used for the purpose of dissuading a witness from attending or testifying at a trial need not be averred.[1] The offense being indictable at common law, the concluding words of the indictment, "contrary to the form of the statute," are to be rejected as surplusage, where the offense is not punishable by any statute.[2] Where the facts alleged show an obstruction and hindrance of public justice, in the legal sense and meaning of those words, it is no objection to the indictment that it does not conclude "to the obstruction and hindrance of public justice."[3]

e. Refusal to Obey Subpœna or Other Process to Testify. An indictment for the offense of failing or refusing to attend and testify in obedience to a subpœna or other process must contain a substantial description of such subpoena or other process,[4] and of the manner of service of the subpœna or other process disobeyed,[5] so that the court may determine, as a matter of law, whether defendant was legally summoned or not.[6] And it must allege that there was a cause pending in some court in which defendant was required to testify.[7]

f. Furnishing False Certificate to Obtain Continuance of Trial of Cause. An information for attempting to obstruct justice by furnishing a certificate to one charged with a criminal offense, to enable him to obtain an adjournment, is bad, if it charges the making of such certificate by inference only, and fails to charge that it was furnished by defendant with a corrupt intent.[8] Where there is no evidence to show that defendant made the specific certificate set forth in the information, although there is evidence tending to show that he made and furnished a certificate similar to a part of the certificate set forth in the information, the variance is fatal.[9]

3. Evidence. The rules of evidence applicable to criminal prosecutions generally, in respect of presumptions,[13] burden of proof,[14] admissibility,[15] and weight for resisting an officer in arresting a person for a misdemeanor, without a warrant, the court charged the jury that the penalty in case of conviction would be "any sum not less than $500." It was held error, under the act of April 4, 1881, amending Pen. Code, art. 220, so as to make the penalty in such cases a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars, nor more than five hundred dollars. Holmes v. State, (Tex. App. 1891) 17 S. W. 1089.

Instruction held proper.— In an indictment for resisting an officer, a charge that if defendant was too intoxicated to be capable of forming the statutory intent he would be free from the statutory guilt, but not otherwise, is as much as defendant had a right to ask. People v. Haley, 48 Mich. 495, 12 N. W. 671.

Instructions properly refused.— In a prosecution for failure to obey the summons of an officer to assist him in the execution of process, when it does not appear that the officer requested defendant to make an arrest alone, or take the initiative in so doing, a request implying that such was the case, and, if so, to acquit, was properly refused. Dougherty v. State, 106 Ala. 63, 17 So. 393. In a prosecution for resisting an officer in the execution of process, where it appears that defendant snatched the warrant for his arrest from the hands of the officer attempting to serve it, and refused to go before the justice issuing it, it was proper to refuse an instruction that, if the jury were in reasonable doubt as to whether defendant assaulted the officer from any other motive than resisting the legal process, they must find for defendant. King v. State, 89 Ala. 43, 8 So. 120, 18 Am. St. Rep. 89. In a prosecution for resisting an officer who was attempting to seize property under a writ of sequestration, it was not error to refuse to instruct that, if the jury believed that the officer was attempting to execute a writ which was not valid and legal they should acquit, as such instruction relegated to the jury the question of the validity of the writ, which was for the court to determine. Witherspoon v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 532, 61 S. W. 396, 96 Am. St. Rep. 812.

Instructions improperly refused.— In a prosecution for failing to obey the summons of an officer to assist him in the execution of a warrant of arrest, it was held improper for the court to refuse a request to instruct the jury that if they believed from all the circumstances that at the time of the summoning of defendant attempt to make the arrest, or to aid therein, would have been both fatal and dangerous, then defendant must be acquitted, is error. Dougherty v. State, 106 Ala. 63, 17 So. 393.

Questions for jury.— The prosecuting witness, a deputy constable, testified that he went to defendant's residence about daylight, knocked at the front door, and, on defendant's inquiry, made known his name, and that he was an officer with a warrant for his arrest; that defendant attempted to escape through the back door, and, when witness came around, defendant ordered him to throw up his hands, and fired almost instantly. Defendant testified that the prosecuting witness fired the first shot, and that it was dark, and he did not know the witness, or that he was an officer, and only shot in self-defense. It was held proper to submit to the jury the question whether defendant knew the official character of the witness. State v. Bateswell, 105 Mo. 609, 16 S. W. 953.

Presumption of innocence.— A defendant in a prosecution for resisting an officer in executing, or attempting to execute, process, like defendant in every criminal case, is presumed to be innocent of the offense charged against him. U. S. v. Terry, 42 Fed. 317.

Presumption as to officer's authority.— In a prosecution for resisting the execution of process by an officer, proof that such officer at the time of the alleged offense was in the performance of the duties of his office raises the presumption that he had been duly appointed thereto, until the contrary appears. Allen v. State, 21 Ga. 217, 16 Am. Dec. 457.

Officer taking prerequisite oath.— The production of a deputy marshal's commission and proof that he was in the performance of the duties of his office raises a presumption that he had taken all prerequisite oaths required by statute. U. S. v. Hudson, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,412, 1 Hask. 527.

Presumption that officer performed his duty.— On a prosecution for resisting the execution of a warrant of arrest the presumption is that the officer performed the duties imposed upon him by statute, by informing the person to be arrested of his purpose, and if required, by exhibiting his warrant. Evidence held admissible.— On a prosecution for resisting the levy of an execution upon which the officer has made a return of "no property found," it is not contradictory of the return to prove acts of defendant preventing the levy of an execution, and evidence for that purpose is admissible. Oliver v. State, 17 Ark. 508. It was proper, on a prosecution for attempting by persuasion to prevent a witness from testifying before the grand jury, to prove that defendant falsely represented that he had been sent to request witness not to testify. State v. Desforges, 47 La. Ann. 1167, 17 So. 811. On a prosecution for attempting by persuasion to prevent a witness from testifying before the grand jury, it was not error to permit the state's witness to testify that in conversations in which the persuasion was used the character of the grand jury proceeding was discussed by accused. State v. Desforges, supra. On a prosecution for attempting by persuasion to prevent a witness from testifying before the grand jury, it was proper to prove that when the persuasion was used defendant knew of the investigation, and that the party sought to be persuaded was a material witness and that the investigation resulted in indictment. State v. Desforges, supra. In a prosecution in the superior court for preventing a person from appearing as a witness, evidence that defendant formerly pleaded guilty to the same offense in the justice's court, and afterward withdrew the plea, is admissible. State v. Bringgold, 40 Wash. 12, 82 Pac. 132. On the trial of an information for obstructing an indifferent person deputed to serve a writ of attachment, under a statute prohibiting any person from obstructing any sheriff, etc., the original process was admissible in evidence to prove the offense, although it had not been returned to court; the offense being complete when the service of process was obstructed, and it not being a question of the justification of the indifferent person for his doings under the writ. State v. Moore, 39 Conn. 244. On a prosecution for dissuading a witness from attending or testifying, evidence that defendant falsely stated to such witness that he had been sent to request him not to testify is admissible. State v. Desforges, 47 La. Ann. 1167, 17 So. 811. In a criminal prosecution for resisting an officer who was attempting to seize property under a voidable writ of sequestration, the writ was properly received in evidence on behalf of the state, over defendant's objections that the same was invalid as not describing the property sufficiently, and because such description did not comply with that in the affidavit, since such objections, although valid in a civil suit, are without merit as a defense on a criminal prosecution. Witherspoon v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 532, 61 S. W. 396, 96 Am. St. Rep. 612. On the trial of indictment for dissuading a witness from testifying on an investigation by a grand jury, evidence is admissible that when the persuasion was used the contemplated investigation was known to defendant, and that he also knew the person persuaded not to testify was a material witness in that investigation. State v. Desforges, 47 La. Ann. 1167, 17 So. 811.

Evidence held inadmissible.— In a prosecution for resisting arrest, it appeared that defendant snatched the warrant for his arrest from the hands of the officer holding it, and refused to go before the justice who issued it. It was held proper to exclude evidence offered by defendant for the purpose of showing that the next morning he proposed to go with the officer before some justice other than the one who issued the warrant. King v. State, 89 Ala. 43, 8 So. 120, 18 Am. St. Rep. 89. On the trial of an indictment for obstructing an officer in the service of process, evidence that the goods, in the attachment of which the obstruction was interposed, belonged to defendant, and not to the party to the process, is not admissible. State v. Fifield, 18 N. H. 34. Contra, Oliver v. State, 17 Ark. 508. Since a warrant of arrest is the best evidence of its own legality in the prosecution for resisting arrest, it should be produced, and secondary evidence of it is not admissible until its non-production is accounted for. Scott v. State, 3 Tex. App. 103. Where on the trial of one charged with resisting an officer in the execution of a mortgage fieri facias it appeared that it was issued on a proceeding under the act of Dec. 16, 1899, to foreclose a bill of sale which was absolute on its face, and that the affidavit on which the fieri facias was based failed to show that the bill of sale was given to secure a debt, the fieri facias was not legal process, and, on proper objection made by the accused, should not have been admitted in evidence. Searcy v. State, 114 Ga. 270, 40 S. E. 235.

Evidence held sufficient.— When an offer to bribe a witness with money is shown on the trial of one charged, under a statute making it an offense to offer to bribe any witness in any case, either criminal or civil, it is not necessary to a conviction that the state should prove that the money was either actually tendered or produced. Jackson v. State, 43 Tex. 421. On a prosecution for resisting an officer in the execution of a warrant of arrest, evidence showing that the marshal was taking his prisoner to jail when defendant came up, and objected, and then assaulted the marshal, rendering him incapable of detaining the prisoner, who thereupon escaped, warranted the conviction. State v. Garrett, 80 Iowa 589, 46 N. W. 748. On a trial for obstructing a constable in serving a possessory warrant on S, the evidence for the state was that S refused to surrender the property; that a scuffle ensued; that someone pulled the constable away from S, and immediately afterward defendant came between them, and the constable shot him. The testimony for defendant was that the latter heard the trouble, and came to get his small child who was present, and that defendant took no part in the conflict. It was held that a judgment of conviction should not be disturbed. Bunkley v. State, 91 Ga. 44, 16 S. E. 256. In a prosecution for resisting an officer, it is sufficient to show that

4. Defenses. It is no defense to a prosecution for resisting the execution of process by a de facto officer that he was not such de jure.[17] Nor is it a defense to an indictment for resisting or obstructing an officer in the discharge of his duty that the object of the party was personal chastisement, and not to obstruct or impede the officer in the discharge of his duty, if defendant knew the officer to be so engaged.[18] But it is a good defense that the alleged resistance was made while the officer was attempting to take possession of defendant's property without the necessary legal process.[19]

B. Punishment. The punishment for an offense of this character is usually fixed by a provision in the particular statute defining the offense.[20] the warrant was issued by an acting justice without producing his commission. State v. Wallahan, Tapp. (Ohio) 80.

Insufficiency.— A conviction for the offense of obstructing or resisting an officer in an attempt to execute a warrant of arrest will be set aside, when the evidence fails to show that the accused had notice of the official character of the person attempting to make the arrest, and it is shown that such person did not have a warrant for the arrest of the accused, although the accused knew that a warrant had been issued and was in possession of the sheriff in a distant part of the county. Punishment held not excessive.— The sentence of four months' imprisonment in the county jail upon conviction for resisting an officer in the service of a search warrant is not excessive, where it appears that such resistance was violent. State v. Moore, 125 Iowa 749, 101 N. W. 732. Likewise a fine of five hundred dollars is not excessive where it appears that the statutory maximum is a thousand dollars, and that defendant, when attempt was made to arrest him, drew a revolver and said that he would shoot the officer before he would submit to an arrest. Extraordinary construction based on context.—As to an information charging that defendants conspired to prevent a person "then and there . . . in the employment of" a certain company "from obtaining work or employment, or continuing in his said work and employment, at his said trade or occupation, in the said shops" of the said company, it was said "as it is alleged that McClure was in the employment of that corporation when the conspiracy was formed, 'obtaining' employment in its shops and 'continuing' employment there are synonymous terms. The two words convey a conjunctive and not a disjunctive meaning." On that ground it was held that the information was not in the alternative. State v. Dyer, 67 Vt. 690, 691, 700; 32 Atl. 814.

"Is obtained" construed as "is hereafter obtained," as used in a statute providing for an alias or pluries execution, and in which all the other phrases point to the future see McGovern v. Connell, 43 N. J. L. 106, 108, 110.

The lien of an execution is not "obtained" against a judgment debtor, upon property, until that property is acquired by the debtor, even where, as a general rule, the lien relates back to the first day of the term when judgment was rendered. It is indeed with hesitation that Puffendorf affirms that a wild beast mortally wounded, or greatly maimed, cannot be fairly intercepted by another, whilst the pursuit of the person inflicting the wound continues. . . Barbeyrac, in his notes on Puffendorf, does not accede to the definition of occupancy by the latter, but on the contrary, affirms, that actual bodily seizure is not, in all cases, necessary to constitute possession of wild animals. He does not, however, describe the acts which, according to his ideas, will amount to an appropriation of such animals to private use, so as to exclude the claims of all other persons by title of occupancy, to the same animals; and he is far from averring that pursuit alone is sufficient for that purpose. . . . the mortal wounding of such beasts by one not abandoning his pursuit, may, with the utmost propriety, be deemed possession of him; since, thereby, the pursuer manifests an unequivocal intention of appropriating the animal to his individual use, has deprived him of his natural liberty, and brought him within his certain control"]. OCCUPANTIS FIUNT DERELICTA. A maxim meaning "Things abandoned become the property of the (first) occupant."[33]

OCCUPANT STATUTES. Betterment statutes, providing that a bona fide occupant making lasting improvements in good faith shall have a lien upon the estate covered by the true owner to the extent that his improvements have increased the harmony with his title. His possession must, in the language of the authorities, be apparent, open, notorious, unequivocal, pedis possessio, carrying with it the evidences and marks of ownership."

"Occupant" and "party in possession" are not strictly synonymous as used in a statute providing for selection and sale of lands granted by the United States to Nevada. Occupant means, as in the United States Preëmption Act, a person who is living upon the quarter section in question, though not necessarily in possession of the whole quarter. O'Neale v. Cleaveland, 3 Nev. 485, 492.

Not necessarily owner see Thompson v. Berlin, 87 Minn. 7, 9, 91 N. W. 25.

Not necessarily resident see Thompson v. Berlin, 87 Minn. 7, 10, 91 N. W. 25; Hagar v. Wikoff, 2 Okla. 580, 588, 39 Pac. 281.

Exclusive character.— A man who only enjoys the use of premises in common with the public can, in no just sense, be said to be an occupant. Redfield v. Utica, etc., R. Co., 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 54, 58.

"Occupants" used as "tenants" and not "owners," in a deed, limiting the use of a water right to such as "has been the custom of the occupants." Wright v. Newton, 130 Mass. 552, 554.

One who uses land only as the bed of underground pipes is not, under a statute providing for notice of a highway, the "occupant" entitled to such notice. People v. Allegany County, 36 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 544, 547, 549. But water and gas companies have been held "occupiers" in respect of their pipes under ground, and so ratable for improvements, under 2 Geo. III, c. 12. 31. So defined in holding that a statute providing for assessment upon owners, lessees, "parties and persons respectively, who may be interested in or entitled unto" lands applies not only to owners, but to occupants. Gilbert v. Havemeyer, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 506, 509.

By entry and attornment.—One who enters the premises of a mill and to whom the tenant attorns is thereby an occupant within the meaning of a statute provided for an action, for flowage, against such occupant. Abbott v. Upham, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 172.

Husband merely living on wife's property, not its occupant.— Within the meaning of the tax law requiring property to be assessed to the owner or occupant, "merely living with the wife on her separate property hardly makes the husband the occupant." Volunteer housekeeper not occupant.— The tenant's mother-in-law taking charge of his household, and making his house her own, is not an occupant, so as to be liable in an action for use and occupation. Tinder v. Davis, 88 Ind. 99, 101.

Lessor's agent not included see State v. Coe, 72 Me. 456.

Under the Election Act, 32 Vict. c. 21, § 5, occupant is defined as a person bona fide occupying property otherwise than as owner or tenant, either in his own right or in the right of his wife, but being in possession of such property and enjoying the revenues and profits arising therefrom to his own use, while under the Assessment Law, 32 Vict. c. 36, of the same date, "occupant" is made convertible with householder, and an undefined distinction between "occupant" and "tenant" preserved. 50. Webster Dict. [quoted in Wait v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 13 Hun (N. Y.) 371, 373].

Occupied "implies the conception of permanent tenure for a period of greater or less duration." Lacy v. Green, 84 Pa. St. 514, 520 [quoted in Lane v. Nelson, 7 Kulp (Pa.) 286, 290].

Construed as carrying the freehold.— A devise to "use and occupy" during life carries the title, but this construction holds only where there is no language in the will showing that the testator contemplated a personal use. Reeve v. Troth, (N. J. Ch. 1899) 42 Atl. 571, 572. A right to "live in, inhabit, dwell in and occupy" premises, "as he heretofore has done and now does, for and during the term of his natural life," reserved in a deed, retains a life-estate, for while the words before it import only a liberty to inhabit, "the word occupy carries the interest reserved still further and shows that the whole estate was intended to be reserved." Rex v. Eatington, 4 T. R. 177, 181 [quoted in Lane v. Nelson, 7 Kulp (Pa.) 286, 291].

As a word of direction merely see Rountree v. Dixon, 105 N. C. 350, 354, 11 S. E. 158; Gardener v. Wagner, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5,218, Baldw. 454, 458.

Used to describe land devised, the words "occupied by me" do not create a non-apparent easement, such as a right of way, over premises formerly belonging to the testator and over which he was accustomed to pass. Fetters v. Humphreys, 19 N. J. Eq. 471, 473, 474. Which "I now occupy," held to import actual use, possession, and cultivation. "It would be nonsense, in common parlance, to say that a man occupied a farm which was in the tenure, possession and management of another." Jackson v. Sill, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 201, 214, 6 Am. Dec. 363.

Promising quiet enjoyment.— Shall "hold and occupy" premises during the term, used in a lease, held to amount to a general covenant for quiet enjoyment. Ellis v. Welch, 6 Mass. 246, 250, 4 Am. Dec. 122.

51. Standard Dict. [quoted in Herman v. Katz, 101 Tenn. 118, 123, 47 S. W. 86, 41 L. R. A. 700].

In the preëmption acts the term has been held inapplicable to any other state of things than a bona fide use and improvement of land. In re Selby, 6 Mich. 193, 204.

In connection with fencing.— Occupancy in a provision for compulsory proceedings to render one who occupies, in common with another, lands owned in severalty, liable to share the expense of building a fence at the suit of other such occupant, "means something more than boarding or living upon the premises." One may have his home on a place and still have no right or power to place any fence or other erection upon it. To be an occupant in the sense of this statute one must be in possession and have the use and control of the land. Carpenter v. Vail, 36 Mich. 226, 229.

In a general Indian appropriation act "enter upon and occupy" relating to certain lands acquired from Indians is used in the ordinary sense of the word, and has no technical significance. Smith v. Townsend, 148 U. S. 490, 500, 13 S. Ct. 634, 37 L. ed. 533.

In connection with voters' qualifications, to "occupy as a tenant," as a qualification under 2 Wm. IV, c. 45, § 27, for voting, possess;[52] to be in possession or occupation, hold possession, be an occupant, have possession and use;[53] to hold or keep for use, to possess, to cover or fill.[54] (See Occupation, and Cross-References Thereunder.)

cannot consist in occupying a house which one is required to occupy for the purpose of his employment, though such house be used as his home. Clark v. St. Mary's Parish, 1 C. B. N. P. 44, 1 Lutw. Reg. Cas. 51, 5 M. & G. 54, 7 Scott N. R. 581, 44 E. C. L. 39. Lessees, who have, as such, the right to exclude other persons from the premises and who use such premises for their own purposes as well as for those of an association of which they are members (although the servants of the association have charge of the premises) occupy them as tenants within the meaning of 2 Wm. IV, c. 45 (Luckett v. Bright, 2 C. B. 193, 196, 10 Jur. 75, 15 L. J. C. P. 85, 1 Lutw. Reg. Cas. 456, 52 E. C. L. 193).

52. Richardson Dict. [quoted in Herman v. Katz, 101 Tenn. 118, 123, 47 S. W. 86, 41 L. R. A. 700]. But compare Rex v. Great Bolton, 8 B. & C. 71, 72, 15 E. C. L. 43; Rex v. Tonbridge, 6 B. & C. 88, 92, 13 E. C. L. 52, where "hold" and "occupy" are differentiated, under 59 Geo. III, c. 30, requiring a building to be "held," but land, "occupied," that the holder or occupant might gain a settlement. Thus, the underletting of part of a parcel of land would prevent the settlement, while that of part of a house would not.

Possess.— "In the primary and most familiar sense of the word 'occupy,' it is the equivalent of the word 'possess.'" Lacy v. Green, 84 Pa. St. 514, 520 [quoted in Lane v. Nelson, 7 Kulp (Pa.) 286, 290].

Denoting actual possession see Herskell v. Bushnell, 37 Conn. 36, 42, 9 Am. Rep. 299; Hall v. Roberts, 74 S. W. 199, 200, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2362; Campbell v. Machias, 33 Me. 419; Lee v. Templeton, 72 Mass. 579, 583. "Occupy," in a statute providing for the building of line fences by adjoining owners who "shall occupy" the land, was held to refer to "such occupation only as will make it necessary or advantageous for the purpose thereof to fence the land, whether its owner reside thereon or not." Maudlin v. Hanscombe, 12 Colo. 204, 205, 206, 20 Pac. 619.

"Occupied by Indian tribes" see U. S. v. Rogers, 23 Fed. 658, 665, 666.

53. Century Dict. [quoted in Lyons v. Andry, 106 La. 356, 359, 31 So. 38, 87 Am. St. Rep. 299, 55 L. R. A. 724].

"Occupied" is held in possession (Webster Dict. [quoted in Coleman v. Eberly, 76 Pa. St. 197, 201, trial judge's charge]); and is synonymous with "possessed" (Evans v. Foster, 79 Tex. 48, 51, 15 S. W. 170).

Does not necessarily preclude absence from place occupied. In discussing the meaning of "occupy or continuing to occupy" in the Homestead Act, it was said: "In common parlance and in reference to housekeeping, we at once attach the idea of actual residence, dwelling, abiding on, the place of bed, board and washing, three acts of constant recurrence, to supply the necessaries of life and renew the physical man. This is the second sense given it by Webster, but it is used also in the sense of possess, generally, and Webster also uses the word possess in the same variety of senses in the main as is given to occupy or occupancy. Turn to 2 Bouvier's Law Dict. 240, 'occupancy'; 336, 'possession,' and we find the words used and understood in the same great variety of senses. If a man go abroad, animo revertendi, and reside for temporary purposes of trade or other business, he will not lose his domicile; and yet we know that the party's domicile follows his actual residence. So it is with foreign ministers and diplomatic agents. In contemplation of law, they continue to occupy their mansions or dwellings in their own country, though actually resident abroad for years." Walters v. People, 18 Ill. 194, 199, 65 Am. Dec. 730 [quoted in Tumlinson v. Swinney, 22 Ark. 400, 405, 76 Am. Dec. 432].

In guarantee of rent "as long as said Morris shall occupy said premises" it was held that "the word 'occupy' was used not simply in the narrower sense of actual or personal occupancy, but also in the larger sense of tenancy actually existing under the lease." Morrow v. Brady, 12 R. I. 130, 131 [quoted in Lane v. Nelson, 7 Kulp (Pa.) 286, 291].

In the sense of "reside upon" see Wolfskill v. Malajowich, 39 Cal. 276, 279.

Under regulations for assessment see State v. Abbott, 42 N. J. L. 111, 113.

"Inhabited" construed as "occupied," when used of a dwelling-house. Smith v. Dauney, [1904] 2 K. B. 186, 197, 73 L. J. K. B. 646, 90 L. T. Rep. N. S. 760, 20 T. L. R. 444, 53 Wkly. Rep. 254.

To let to another is not to occupy, under laws exempting premises from taxation while occupied by certain organizations. Louisville v. Louisville Bd. of Trade, 90 Ky. 409, 14 S. W. 408, 12 Ky. L. Rep. 397, 9 L. R. A. 629; Pierce v. Cambridge, 2 Cush. (Mass.) 611.

OCCUR. To befall, to happen.[55] As used in regard to loss in insurance policies, the term has been held equivalent to arise, or accrue.[56]

OCEAN. Open sea, the high sea, that which is the common highway of nations, the common domain, within the body of no country and under the particular right or jurisdiction of no sovereign, but open, free and common to all alike, as a common and equal right;[57] the main sea.[58] (See HIGH SEAS; and, generally, CRIMINAL LAW; NAVIGABLE WATERS; WATERS.)

OCEAN WATERS. As describing waters subject to laws of navigation for the purpose of preventing collisions at sea, all waters opening directly or indirectly into the ocean and navigable by ships, foreign or domestic, coming in from the ocean, of draught as great as is drawn by the larger ships which traverse the open sea.[59] (See OCEAN; and, generally, NAVIGABLE WATERS; WATERS.)

OCTB An abbreviation of "October."[60]

ODD. May refer either to number or singularity.[61]

ODERUNT PECCARE BONI, VIRTUTIS AMORE; ODERUNT PECCARE MALI, FORMIDINE PŒNÆ. A maxim meaning "Good men hate sin through love of virtue; bad men, through fear of punishment"[62]

In the sense of: "Among;" as in a power to appoint "to whom she thinks proper of her heirs" which is a power to select and dispose of it among her legal heirs (Milhollen v. Rice, 13 W. Va. 510, 542). "By;" as in the phrase "bounded north of" certain land, defining the northern boundary of the premises granted, where "of" was held capable of consideration as "used in its obsolete, but perfectly grammatical, meaning of 'by,' as in the familiar examples — 'seen of men' — 'led of the spirit' — 'tempted of the devil'"; but the court preferred to regard it as a mere clerical error for "on." "Of" and "for" are interchangeable in such use as "courts of [or for] the county," "clerks of the circuit courts of [or for] the county." Slymer v. State, 62 Md. 237, 242.

Distinguished from "for" see 19 Cyc. 1103.

Erroneous use.— "Of" has been held a manifest blunder for "off" in the phrase "deduct the tax off the interest paid" (Com. v. Delaware Div. Canal Co., 123 Pa. St. 594, 625, 16 Atl. 584, 2 L. R. A. 798]; and construed "if" when known to be used in its stead in a statute (Newgass v. New Orleans, 33 Fed. 196, 198).

"Of and concerning," relating to.— The statement in a declaration that a libel was "of and concerning" certain matters did not necessitate proving a libel "relating specifically to every one of these matters," but only to prove "a libel relating to those matters, so far as they are connected with the libel in respect either of the particular defamatory character ascribed to it in the declaration, or of the manner in which it is afterwards set out." May v. Brown, 3 B. & C. 113, 127, 4 D. & R. 670, 2 L. J. K. B. O. S. 212, 10 E. C. L. 60.

72. As in "A. of Macon," meaning that A is a resident of, and lives in, Macon. Ivey v. State, 112 Ga. 175, 37 S. E. 398. So used "of" denotes "present residence," and "has no appropriate signification but that the person resides there." Lachaise v. Marks, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 610, 617.

Sufficient allegation of abode.— Osborn v. Gough, 3 B. & P. 551, 554. "Of" a place held a sufficient allegation of dwelling in it, though it was remarked by one of the judges: "'Of' does not necessarily imply that the party dwells in the place of which he is described to be, according to several instances in Com. Y. 41, 44, where it was held that the mere description "Giles Sanford, of the city of Albany" at the beginning of an application, and, again, of the affidavit verifying it, was not a statement, or positive averment in express terms, that Giles Sanford resided at Albany — that even if it could be held to amount to such positive or express statement, it was not

OF COUNSEL. As used in statutes disqualifying the judge who has been of counsel for either party, from sitting, of counsel for a party in that cause and in that controversy, and if either the cause or the controversy is not identical the disqualification does not exist.[73] (See, generally, ATTORNEY AND CLIENT; JUDGES.)

OF COURSE. Applied to costs, as a matter of right.[74] Applied to motions, those which are granted without the court being called upon to investigate the truth of any allegation or suggestion upon which they are founded.[75] Applied to a writ, according to the course and practice of the court from which it issues.[76]

OFF. Written on the margin of the official docket of a term of court by the clerk during vacation, opposite the minute of a motion, the word "off" is not an entry of the overruling of the motion.[77]

OFFAL. That which falls off, as a chip or chips in dressing wood or stone; that which is suffered to fall off as of little value or use; waste meat, the parts of a butchered animal which are rejected as unfit for use; refuse of any kind, rubbish;[78] that which falls off, as fragments or leavings, regarded as of trifling value;[79] waste meat, carrion, refuse, that which is thrown away as of no value or fit only for beasts;[80] refuse animal matter.[81] (Offal: Authority to Remove, see HEALTH. Disposal of, see MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS. Nuisance, see NUISANCES. See also GARBAGE.)

OFFEND. To transgress the moral or divine law.[82] (See OFFENSE.)

OFFENDER. A term constantly employed in the statutes to indicate persons implicated in the commission of crime.[83] (See OFFEND; OFFENSE.)

OFFENSE. In its legal signification, the transgression of a law;[84] a breach of verified, as the oath of the affidavit did not apply to it.

"Garbage" includes "offal."— St. Louis v. Weitzel, 130 Mo. 600, 617, 31 S. W. 1045.

In a fishing lease the stipulation that the lessor should be entitled to all "offal" embraces fish that are not fit for food originally or through spoiling, cuttings and trimmings, but nothing which is fit for food and is consumed or sold for that purpose. Read v. Granberry, 30 N. C. 109, 112.

82. Webster Int. Dict.

"Offending," in the phrase "each and every person offending against the provisions of this act shall for every such offence forfeit," etc., in a statute prohibiting an otherwise legitimate act, is used in the sense of breaking or violating the prohibitory injunction and not as referring to the commission of a crime. Ott v. Jordan, 116 Pa. St. 218, 224, 9 Atl. 321.

83. Illies v. Knight, 3 Tex. 312, 315.

In a general sense.— "Offender," occurring in a statute defining felony as an offense for which the "offender" shall be liable to death or imprisonment in state prison, held "not used as a word of limitation, making it dependent upon the personal status of the criminal, or his exemption from a particular punishment by reason of age or mental incapacity, where the offense of which he is convicted is a felony; but as a word of general application, in a general sense." People v. Park, 41 N. Y. 21, 24, 1 Cow. Cr. 227.

W. 5; State v. Whittemore, 50 N. H. 245, 247, 9 Am. Rep. 196].

The fact rather than the name of any crime.— The word "offenses," as used in the provision "all offenses recognized by the common law as crimes, and not here enumerated, shall be punished," etc., "does not refer specially to the name of crimes. It more properly refers to the acts and intentions, or acts and criminal negligence that make up a crime." Territory v. Ye Wan, 2 Mont. 478, 479.

Various kinds of offense — Continuous.— While keeping gaming tables may be a "con-

the laws established for the protection of the public as distinguished from an infringement of mere private rights; a punishable violation of law, a crime, also, sometimes, a crime of the lower grade, a misdemeanor;[85] the doing that which a penal law forbids to be done or omitting to do what it commands.[86] An offense tinuous offenses," exhibiting one is not, therefore a person charged with the latter, cannot plead a former conviction for exhibiting such table on a different occasion. Each act of exhibition constitutes a separate offense. Kain v. State, 16 Tex. App. 282, 293. "A nuisance, which is an offence that may have continuance . . . may therefore be laid with a continuando." Wells v. Com., 12 Gray (Mass.) 326, 328.

A criminal offense consists in the violation of public law in the commission of which there must be a union or joint operation of act and intention or criminal negligence. Howard v. People, 193 Ill. 615, 617, 61 N. E. 1016. So defined by statute in Illinois. Story v. People, 79 Ill. App. 562, 565. Conviction of criminal offense may be proved to affect credibility of witness. Such criminal offense may consist in gambling where the latter is defined by statute to be a criminal misdemeanor. Slater v. Thornhill, 174 Mo. 364, 370, 74 S. W. 832. "An offence which may be the subject of criminal procedure, is an act committed or omitted in violation of public law." Wharton Cr. L. [quoted in U. S. v. Chapel, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,781]. Although contempt is usually regarded as a criminal offense (see 9 Cyc. 6), it has been held not an offense within the meaning of a statute granting credit for good behavior to prisoners convicted of offenses confined. In re Terry, 37 Fed. 649, 650, 13 Sawy. 598.

A cumulative offense is one which can only be committed by a repetition of acts of the same kind, which acts may be on different days, for example, being a common seller. Wells v. Com., 12 Gray (Mass.) 326, 329.

A municipal offense, as distinguished from international, is one committed against a particular state (Winspear v. Holman Dist. Tp., 37 Iowa 542, 544), or separate community (Cook v. Portland, 20 Oreg. 580, 583, 27 Pac. 263, 13 L. R. A. 533).

Public.— A crime is none the less a public offense when it can only be prosecuted or complained of by the person injured. State v. Corliss, 85 Iowa 18, 19, 51 N. W. 1154. "Public offense" as used in a statute authorizing a peace officer to arrest, means no more than "offense" as defined by Bouvier and Abbott. State v. Cantieny, 34 Minn. 1, 9, 24 N. W. 458.

"Offense punishable by law."— "Offense" was so construed, as used in a statute providing for venue of an action for damages founded on a crime, "offense," or trespass. Austin v. Cameron, 83 Tex. 351, 354, 18 S. W. 437.

May consist in an omission.— State v. Hageman, 13 N. J. L. 314, 321.

Offense malum in se is one which is entirely evil as adjudged by the sense of civilized communities, such as murder, arson, theft, and the like. Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Lewin v. Johnson, 32 Hun (N. Y.) 408, 411].

85. Abbott L. Dict. [quoted in Cruthers v. State, 161 Ind. 139, 147, 67 N. E. 930].

Does not necessarily amount to crime.— Angell v. Van Schaick, 56 Hun (N. Y.) 247, 253, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 568 [reversed on other grounds in 132 N. Y. 187, 30 N. E. 395]; Ott v. Jordan, 116 Pa. St. 218, 224, 9 Atl. 321. The word "has no precise or technical signification, and is used, generally and loosely, in the sense of the matter or transaction which constitutes the subject or cause of the suit." The Idaho, 29 Fed. 187, 192, construing a provision for procedure, against a vessel, by way of libel, in any district court having jurisdiction of "the offense."

Said to be synonymous with misdemeanor, in criminal law. Fetter v. Wilt, 46 Pa. St. 457, 460.

86. Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in Dominick v. Bowdoin, 44 Ga. 357, 369; Cruthers v. State, 161 Ind. 139, 147, 67 N. E. 930; State v. Cantieny, 34 Minn. 1, 9, 24 N. W. 458; In re Terry, 37 Fed. 649, 650, 13 Sawy. 598].

In this sense it is nearly synonymous with "crime."— In a more confined sense it may be considered as having the same meaning as misdemeanor, but it differs from it in this that it is not indictable but punishable summarily by forfeiture of a penalty. Bouvier L. Dict. [quoted in In re Terry, 37 Fed. 649, 650, 13 Sawy. 598].

Synonymous with: "Crime" see Cruthers v. State, 161 Ind. 139, 147, 67 N. E. 930; People v. Hanrahan, 75 Mich. 611, 619, 42 N. W. 1124, 4 L. R. A. 751; State v. West, 42 Minn. 147, 152, 43 N. W. 845; People v. French, 102 N. Y. 583, 587, 7 N. E. 913; Illies v. Knight, 3 Tex. 312, 314. "Criminal offense" see Cruthers v. State, supra; State v. West, supra.

"Offense charged" is not confined to the full crime charged in an indictment but applies to any lesser crime included therein and of which the defendant may be convicted on the same charge. State v. Smith, 164 Mo. 567, 584, 65 S. W. 270; State v. McCormick, 14 Nev. 347, 349.

When completed.— Under a statute declaring it an offense to institute a criminal prosecution maliciously, the offense is completed when the preliminary steps, including the issuance of the warrant, have been taken, and before the arrest, so that where an action is instituted in one county and the arrest made in another, an action for damages based on the offense under a statute providing that said action may be brought in the county where the offense was committed is not properly brought in the county where the arrest was made. Hubbard v. Lord, 59 Tex. 384.

Scope confined to felonies.— In the title of "an act to provide for prosecuting offenses on information," the word "offenses" was as such, is indivisible, but may consist in a series of acts;[87] one act may constitute two offenses.[88] (Offense: Bailable, see Bail. Capital, see Capital. Compound, see Compound Offense. Continuing, see Continuing Offense; Continuous Crime. International, see International Offense. Political, see Extradition (International). See also, generally, Criminal Law.)

OFFENSIVE. Anything that causes displeasure, gives pain or unpleasant sensations, is offensive.[89]

held to embrace all infractions of the criminal code, of the grade of felonies, the body of the act clearly showing such intention. Bolln v. State, 51 Nebr. 581, 584, 71 N. W. 444.

Breach of ordinance excluded by context.— As used in a statute authorizing pardons, the term "offenses" was held in the light of the context to mean violations of state laws and not of municipal ordinances. State v. Renick, 157 Mo. 292, 300, 57 S. W. 713.

"Incorrigible conduct" of an infant is not "an offense against a law of the state." The latter "is an act punishable as a crime under a statute." State v. Schlatterbeck, 39 Ohio St. 268, 270.

Statutory definitions are: "The doing what a penal law forbids to be done, or omitting to do what it commands." Hawaiian Pen. Code [quoted in Reg. v. Lau Kin Chew, 8 Hawaii 370, 374, dissenting opinion, Dole, J.].

"Any offense, as well misdemeanor as felony, for which any punishment by imprisonment or fine, or both, may by law be inflicted." Kan. St. [quoted in Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. State, 22 Kan. 1, 14]; Mo. St. [quoted in State v. Blitz, 171 Mo. 530, 540, 71 S. W. 1027].

"Any act or omission for which the laws of this state prescribe a punishment." Kan. St. [quoted in Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. State, 22 Kan. 1, 14].

"Offenses are either felonies or misdemeanors. Such offenses as are punishable with death or confinement in the penitentiary are felonies. All other offenses, whether at common law or made so by statute, are misdemeanors." Ky. St. [quoted in Com. v. Rowe, 112 Ky. 482, 490, 66 S. W. 29, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1718].

"Any offense for which any criminal punishment may by law be inflicted." 2 N. Y. Rev. St. p. 886, § 37 [quoted in Behan v. People, 3 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 686, 690].

"An act or omission forbidden by positive law, and to which is annexed, on conviction, any punishment prescribed in this Code." Tex. Pen. Code [quoted in Hardin v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 426, 431, 46 S. W. 803].

87. "1. An offense is indivisible. 2. It may consist of a single act, or a series of acts. 3. It may be instantaneous in its consummation, or it may require an interval of time. It is, nevertheless, but one offense." Kain v. State, 16 Tex. App. 282, 306.

88. The same act may be an offense (in the sense of crime) against the state, and an offense (in the sense of tort) against a person (Smith v. Bagwell, 19 Fla. 117, 123, 45 Am. Rep. 12); or an indictable offense which is also punishable as contempt of court (Yates v. Lansing, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 395, 399, 6 Am. Dec. 290; In re Banerjea, L. R. 10 Indian App. 171, 179, judgment delivered by Sir Barnes Peacock).

The same act may be one offense generically, but specifically, another. Thus, generically, stealing live stock running at large unmarked, is larceny but it is also the specific offense. Therefore, under three statutes, one, of the United States, providing that the laws of the United States and the criminal law of Arkansas shall be in force in Indian Territory except where both "have provided for the punishment of the same offense," in which case the laws of the United States shall govern as to such offenses, another, of the United States providing for the punishment of larceny in general, another, part of the criminal law of Arkansas, providing that a person taking or converting certain kinds of live stock at large, unmarked, shall not be deemed guilty of larceny, but that the owner may have his action for the value, it was held that "offenses" as used in the first mentioned statute, meant, "specific offenses." That while the laws of the United States and Arkansas both provided for the punishment of the general offense of larceny, the specific offense of taking unmarked stock was not provided for by the federal statutes, which therefore did not prevail as against the Arkansas statute which expressly excepted that specific offense from punishment. Murray v. U. S., 1 Indian Terr. 28, 34, 35, 35 S. W. 240.

May be either tort or crime.— Cooley Torts [quoted in Jernigan v. Com., 104 Va. 850, 852, 52 S. E. 361].

89. So held of the word as applied to a trade. Rowland v. Miller, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 701.

"The disturbing cause must be real, not fanciful; something more than mere delicacy or fastidiousness." Rowland v. Miller, 15 N. Y. Suppl. 701. In construing a restrictive covenant against use of premises for an offensive trade, it is to be supposed that the parties had in mind not "any business which might be offensive to a person of a supersensitive organization, or to one of a peculiar and abnormal temperament, or to the small class of persons who are generally annoyed by sights, sounds and objects not offensive to other people," but "ordinary, normal people"; and that they "meant to prohibit trades and business which would be offensive to people generally, and would thus render the neighborhood to such people undesirable as a place of residence." Rowland v. Miller, 139 N. Y. 93, 102, 34 N. E. 765, 22 L. R. A. 182 [quoted in Moller v. Presbyterian Hospital, 65 N. Y. App. Div. 134, 136, 72 N. Y. Suppl. 483].

OFFENSIVE WEAPON. A DANGEROUS WEAPON,[90] q. v. (See, generally, WEAPONS.)

OFFER. As a noun, a proposition to do a thing;[91] a proposal;[92] a proposal to be accepted or rejected; first advance; the act of bidding, a price or sum bid; attempt, endeavor.[93] As a verb, to bring to or before; to hold out; to present for acceptance or rejection; to exhibit; to present in words; to proffer; to make a proposal to.[94] (Offer: As Element of Contract in General, see CONTRACTS. Of Sale, see SALES; VENDOR AND PURCHASER. Of Tenancy, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.)

Held offensive, under restrictive covenants as to use of land.— A coal yard, because of the dust (Barrow v. Richard, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 351, 360, 35 Am. Dec. 713); undertaker's shop (Rowland v. Miller, 139 N. Y. 93, 34 N. E. 765, 22 L. R. A. 182 [affirming 15 N. Y. Suppl. 701, 702].

Held not offensive under restrictive covenants.— A hospital, as not necessarily a business "which may be in any wise noxious or offensive to the neighboring inhabitants" (Moller v. Presbyterian Hospital, 65 N. Y. App. Div. 134, 137, 72 N. Y. Suppl. 483); a public house, conduct of, not a trade or business that might grow or lead to be offensive" (Jones v. Thorne, 1 B. & C. 715, 716, 3 D. & R. 152, 1 L. J. K. B. O. S. 200, 25 Rev. Rep. 546, 8 E. C. L. 302).

90. State v. Dineen, 10 Minn. 407.

A thing not originally designed as a weapon may become so by use. Stones capable of inflicting serious injury, if used offensively, and brought and used for that purpose, are offensive weapons within the meaning of a statute relating to night poaching. Rex v. Grice, 7 C. & P. 803, 32 E. C. L. 881. "Bats" or hop poles seven feet long used by smugglers to carry tubs may or may not be offensive weapons according to their use, within a statute relating to smuggling. Rex v. Noakes, 5 C. & P. 326, 24 E. C. L. 588.

92. Haskell v. Davidson, 91 Me. 488, 490, 40 Atl. 330, 64 Am. St. Rep. 254, 42 L. R. A. 155.

Without duration per se.— An offer without more is an offer in the present to be accepted or refused when made. There is no time which a jury may consider reasonable or otherwise for the other party to consider it, except by the agreement or concession of the party making it. Until it is accepted it may be withdrawn, although that be at the next instant after it is made and a subsequent acceptance will be of no avail. Vincent v. Woodland Oil Co., 165 Pa. St. 402, 408, 30 Atl. 991.

93. Com. v. Harris, 1 Leg. Gaz. (Pa.) 455, 457.

94. Webster Dict. [quoted in People v. Ah Fook, 62 Cal. 493, 494]. "To 'offer' to do a thing is to bring to or before — to present for acceptance or rejection — to exhibit something that may be taken or received or not." Morrison v. Springer, 15 Iowa 304, 346.

As mere expression of willingness see Milliken v. Skillings, 89 Me. 180, 183, 36 Atl. 77.

Synonymous with tender see Milliken v. Skillings, 89 Me. 180, 183, 36 Atl. 77.

Promise distinguished.— "To offer it [a bribe] is to present it for acceptance or rejection; to promise it, is to make a declaration or engagement that it shall be given." State v. Harker, 4 Harr. (Del.) 559, 561.

Construed as a promise.— "We offer for" with a statement of subject of offer and price offered, held equivalent to a promise to buy and pay for. Robert E. Lee Silver Min. Co. v. Omaha, etc., Smelting, etc., Co., 16 Colo. 118, 131, 26 Pac. 326.

To "offer to vote" by ballot is to present oneself, with proper qualifications, at the time and place appointed, and to make manual delivery of the ballot to the officers appointed by law to receive it. Chase v. Miller, 41 Pa. St. 403, 419 [quoted, with the addition that it does not necessarily follow that the same would be the meaning of the word "claim" as used in Ky. Const. requiring a voter's residence in the town in which he claims to vote, in Morrison v. Springer, 15 Iowa 304, 346].

"Evidence offered" does not mean evidence given; a bill of exceptions stating that certain evidence was "offered" does not show that it was given. Battle Creek Nat. Bank v. Lock, 132 Ind. 424, 31 N. E. 1115; Lyon v. Davis, 111 Ind. 384, 386, 12 N. E. 714; Garrison v. State, 110 Ind. 145, 11 N. E. 2; Peck v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 101 Ind. 366, 369; Fellenzer v. Van Valzah, 95 Ind. 128, 133; Baltimore, etc., R. Co. v. Barnum, 79 Ind. 261, 263; American Ins. Co. v. Gallahan, 75 Ind. 168, 171; Goodwine v. Crane, 41 Ind. 335, 337. Where, however, in a record on appeal, evidence was described as "offered" but the judge certified that it was all the evidence "given" in the case, it was held that the two statements together showed substantially that the evidence was given. Rags-

OFFERED LANDS. In the practice of the United States land department, lands which are subject to private cash entry at the minimum price.[95] (See, generally, PUBLIC LANDS.)

OFFICE. See OFFICERS.

OFFICE COPY. A copy made by an authorized officer;[96] a copy made by the officer in custody of the record.[97] (See COPY; and, generally, EVIDENCE; RECORDS.)

OFFICE FOUND. More properly, inquest of office;[98] the proceeding which contains the finding of the fact upon the inquest.[99] (See, generally, ESCHEAT.)

OFFICE OF HONOR. The position of a director of an institution for the education of the deaf and dumb, which, although operated by a private corporation, was a public institution, was held an "office of honor" within the meaning of a constitutional provision forbidding any person holding an office of honor under the United States government, to hold any such office under the state.[1]

OFFICE OF PROFIT. An office to which salary, compensation, or fees are attached, a lucrative office.[2] (See OFFICERS.)

OFFICE PAPER. A written agreement between the parties to a pending case, bearing upon and affecting the disposition to be made of the case.[3]

dale v. Barnett, 10 Ind. App. 478, 37 N. E. 1109, 1115. But "offered in evidence" has been construed "introduced in evidence," when obviously used instead of the latter phrase in a bill of exceptions (Harris v. Tomlinson, 130 Ind. 426, 427, 30 N. E. 214); and "offer in evidence" as "read in evidence" when used in an exception to alleged error in permitting defendant to "offer in evidence" a copy of certain statutes (Ansley v. Meikle, 81 Ind. 260, 261).

"Adduced," broader in meaning than "offered," as applied to evidence. Beatty v. O'Connor, 106 Ind. 81, 84, 5 N. E. 880.

Offer for sale.— Under the International Revenue Act, in the definition of retail liquor dealer as "person who shall sell or offer for sale," etc., in order to offer for sale "the license must be first obtained, and then, and not before, the party is at liberty to sell or offer for sale, liquor in less quantities than three gallons. The liquor may be offered for sale without a special or personal solicitation of any particular person to become a purchaser. It may be done by general advertisements in the press, or by the exhibition of signs or symbols in the vicinity of the place of the alleged business, or by having the article on sale, with intent to dispose of it to any one offering to purchase." U. S. v. Dodge, 25 Fed. Cas. No. 14,974, Deady 186, 188 [quoted in State v. Dunbar, 13 Oreg. 591, 594, 11 Pac. 298, 57 Am. Rep. 33]. In a law under which only such illuminating oils as are "offered for sale" may be inspected, the term does not mean that there must be an actual proffer of sale to any particular person. It applies to a stock of oils kept for sale with intent to sell at any time and to any and all persons as opportunity occurs. Willis v. Standard Oil Co., 50 Minn. 290, 296, 52 N. W. 652. Under a statute providing that all of certain lands "offered for sale" by the governor and not sold at the time of offering, shall be subject to private sale after eighteen months, a proclamation by the governor does not constitute an "offering for sale," the land must be regularly proposed for sale at the place and on the day designated by such proclamation. Hardwick v. Reardon, 6 Ark. 77, 78. Goods are offered for sale at the place where they are kept for sale and where a sale may be effected. They are not offered for sale elsewhere by sending out an agent with samples or by establishing an office for the purpose of taking orders. U. S. v. Chevallier, 107 Fed. 434, 436, 46 C. C. A. 402.

98. Baker v. Shy, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 85, 89, 90.

It "was a summary inquisition by the king's escheater, either by virtue of his office or by special royal writ, to ascertain whether in the particular case the sovereign has a right to the possession of the lands. . . . This principle we have inherited from the mother country, and we have our own forms of proceeding in lieu of the ancient inquest of office." Baker v. Shy, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 85, 90.

99. "By the common law, an alien cannot acquire real property by operation of law, but may take it by act of the grantor, and hold it until office found; that is, until the fact of alienage is authoritatively established by a public officer, upon an inquest held at the instance of the government. The proceeding which contains the finding of the fact upon the inquest of the officer is technically designated in the books of law as 'office found.'" Phillips v. Moore, 100 U. S. 208, 212, 25 L. ed. 603 [quoted (save that "alienation" stands in place of "alienage") in Strickley v. Hill, 22 Utah 257, 266, 62 Pac. 893, 83 Am. St. Rep. 786].

I. DEFINITIONS AND DISTINCTIONS.

A. Office. An office in the abstract sense may be defined as: A duty, charge or trust;[1] a place of trust;[2] a position to which certain duties are attached;[3] a right and correspondent duty to execute a public or private trust and to take the emoluments belonging to it;[4] a right to exercise a public or private employment and to take the fees and emoluments thereunto belonging, whether public, as those

1. Webster Dict. [quoted in U. S. v. Fisher, 8 Fed. 414, 415].

Primarily and essentially, duty.— "Though the word 'office' may be used in varying senses, the term in any proper sense implies, as indicated by its etymology, a duty or duties to be performed. Other elements, such as the public nature of the duty and its permanence, may be necessary to constitute a public office; but this element — that is, duty or service to be performed — is an essential part of the definition." Reed v. Schon, 2 Cal. App. 55, 57, 83 Pac. 77, where status of retired army officer was defined.

Implies a duty and the charge of such duty.— Rex v. Burnell, Carth. 478 [quoted and adopted in Ex p. Pool, 2 Va. Cas. 276, 286], argument.

Duty and agency combined.— "In the textbooks it is taught that the word office in its primary signification implies a duty or duties, and, secondarily, the charge of such duties — the agency from the State to perform the duties. The duties of the office are of the first consequence, and the agency from the State to perform those duties is the next step in the creation of an office. It is the union of the two factors, duty and agency, which makes the office." Day's Case, 124 N. C. 362, 368, 32 S. E. 748, 46 L. R. A. 295.

Imports a duty or a trust.— Ex p. Faulkner, 1 W. Va. 269, 297.

of magistrates, or private as those of bailiffs, receivers, and the like;[5] a special trust or charge created by competent authority;[6] a function by virtue whereof a man has some employment in the affairs of another;[7] a position or appointment entailing certain rights and duties;[8] place, position, agency;[9] a post, the possession of which imposes certain duties on the possessor, and confers authority for their performance;[10] a position or station in which a person is employed to perform certain duties, or by virtue of which he becomes charged with the performance of certain duties, public or private;[11] a right to exercise a public function or employment, and to take the fees and the emoluments belonging to it;[12] a public

The function, not place of performance. — As used in the joint resolution of the 39th congress, regarding payment of certain employees in the "office" of the coast survey, naval observatory, etc., etc., the word has reference to the functions to be performed, not to the place where they are performed. "Appointment is often synonymous with office, but it is by no means always so." Com. v. Binns, 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 219, 225.

9. Used, not as public office, but in the sense of place, position, agency, in the phrases, "the governor shall declare said office vacant," and "during their continuance in office," concerning the position of a bank as an adjuster of public moneys. Colquitt v. Simpson, 72 Ga. 501, 510.

"Place." — "The intrinsic meaning of the word is well expressed by the old English word 'place'; and the figurative terms 'incumbent,' 'swearing in,' 'entering upon,' 'vacating,' constantly applied to offices, have the same radical idea." Burrill L. Dict. [quoted in People v. Nichols, 52 N. Y. 478, 485, 11 Am. Rep. 734]. But where "office" and "place" (of trust and profit) were used in the alternative, the terms were distinguished. Doyle v. Raleigh, 89 N. C. 133, 136, 45 Am. Rep. 677.

Technical and popular meanings. — "The word office has two meanings — the one popular, the other legal and technical. Thus. we speak of the office of an executor, guardian, &c. The legal meaning of the term always implies a charge, or trust, conferred by public authority, and for a public purpose." Matter of Dorsey, 7 Port. (Ala.) 293, 371.

An office is a right to exercise a public function or employment, and may be classed into civil and military. And civil may be classed into political, judicial, and ministerial. Political are such as are not connected immediately with the administration of justice, or the execution of the mandates of a superior officer. Judicial are those which relate to the administration of justice. Ministerial are those which give the officer no power to judge of the matter to be done, and require him to obey the mandates of a superior. teristic of public office,[33] as is also the right to discharge the duties of the office;[34] but the receipt of emoluments is not necessary.[35] Finally, the determination of the question whether a given position is an office is sometimes governed by the wording of the particular statute as evidence of the intention of the legislature at the time the position was established. The most marked example of such an influence is to be found in the case of the positions in the service of the United States national government. It has been held that as a result of the provision in the national constitution regulating the appointment of officers,[36] no person in the United States government service is an officer who has not been appointed by the president and confirmed by the senate, or appointed by the president alone, one of the United States courts, or the head of an executive department.[37] It has, however, been held that one appointed by a collector of customs, whose appointment has been approved by the head of an executive department, is an officer of the United States.[38] The wording of particular statutes may be such that the same position may be held to be an office for one purpose and not for another.[39]

C. Distinction Between Office and Employment. Opposed to the conceptions of office and officer are those of employment and employee. While an office is based upon some provision of law, an employment is based upon a contract entered into by the government with the employee.[40] The importance of the distinction is due, among other things, to the fact that, inasmuch as an employment is a contract, the legislature of a state is not permitted by the contract clause of the federal constitution to pass a law impairing the obligation of the contract made with a government employee.[41] An office, however, not being based upon a contract, is not affected by this provision of the federal constitution and the legislature may provide for its termination during the term of the incumbent,[42] and may, during such term, diminish the compensation attached to the office or increase the duties of the office without increasing the compensation.[43] The only jurisdiction in the United States which ever regarded an office as having the characteristics of a property right is North Carolina, which, however, at the present time takes the view of the official relation adopted by the other states.[44] In England, however, as a result of statutory provision, an office has been regarded as partaking of the nature of property, and the courts have, in applying particular statutes, held that one appointed to an office to hold during good behavior is entitled to compensation if removed arbitrarily or if the office is abolished.[45] It is important to distinguish an office from an employment also, because in many respects the rules of law governing the relation of employee and employer do not govern the official relation, which is regulated by that part of the law which may be spoken of as the law of officers. Thus, an officer to whose office no compensation has been attached by law may not bring an action for services rendered.[46] Thus again an officer who has been illegally removed from office is not obliged to deduct from the judgment he may recover from a municipal corporation for the salary he should have received what he may have earned during the period he has been wrongfully excluded from his office.[47] Finally the distinction between an officer and an employee is important because the courts — adopting the principle of strict construction in applying statutes declaring certain acts on the part of an officer to be crimes — will refuse to regard as an officer a person who, while in the public service, does not occupy a position established as a result of the action direct or indirect of the legislature, with a term, duties, and tenure.[48]

II. APPOINTMENT, QUALIFICATION, AND TENURE.[49]

A. Creation and Filling of Offices in General — 1. CREATION OF OFFICE. The power to create an office, unless other provision is made by the constitution, is vested in the legislative department of the government,[50] which may delegate its power to a municipal board or other body.[51] But if the constitution imposes a limitation upon the power of the legislature to create offices this body may not disobey or evade such limitation.[52] In creating an office it is not necessary for the legislature to act in any formal way.[53]

2. ABOLITION OR CONSOLIDATION OF OFFICES. The authority in the government which possesses the power to create an office has, in the absence of some provision of law passed by a higher authority (that is, in the case of a municipal authority, some statutory or constitutional provision; in the case of the legislature, some constitutional provision) the implied power to abolish the office it has created,[54] or to consolidate two or more offices it has created.[55] But if an office has been provided for by the constitution, such an office may not be abolished by an act of the legislature.[56] To abolish an office the intention of the competent authority to abolish such office must be clear.[57]

Home rule provisions.— The purpose of the home rule provisions of the constitution of New York (art. 10, §§ 1, 2) was to preserve to the people of the local divisions of the state the power to select such local officers as they had theretofore selected, but not to give them the right to select new officers even if their duties are local, provided their functions are new and the functions of existing officers are not interfered with. Morgan v. Furey, 186 N. Y. 202, 78 N. E. 869 [affirming 114 N. Y. App. Div. 127, 99 N. Y. Suppl. 783], holding that Laws (1898), p. 1612, c. 676, as amended by Laws (1905), p. 1846, c. 689, creating the metropolitan elections district for the purpose of all elections for state officers, and providing for the appointment by the governor of a state superintendent of elections for such district, is not in violation of the home rule provisions of the constitution, in that the superintendent is not elected by the people of the district, or appointed by some local authority; the office being not only a new one unknown to the constitution, but also new in the essential powers and duties which belong thereto.

3. The Filling of Offices. The method of filling offices is to be determined by the legislature in the absence of constitutional provisions on the subject;[58] and the legislature may, in the absence of such provisions, provide that offices shall be filled by private corporations chartered by authority of the state government,[59] or by voluntary associations of individuals.[60] But where the constitution has provided the method of filling offices the legislature may not provide for filling them in any other manner than that directed by the constitution.[61] When an amendment to the constitution creates a public office, such office may be filled by vote of the electors at the same election at which the amendment is adopted.[62]

4. Authority to Appoint. It is one of the principles of the law of the United States that, in the absence of a constitutional provision to the contrary, any one of the three departments of the government may, under the authority of a statute, appoint its own subordinates.[63] Although there is some conflict, the better rule would seem to be that in the absence of some constitutional provision the power to appoint may also, if the statutes of the legislature so provide, be exercised for any class of officers by any of the three governmental departments.[64]

But in a number of states, particularly when constitutional provisions apply, it is regarded as improper for the legislature or the courts to appoint executive or administrative officers not their immediate subordinates.[65] It is, however, clear that the power of appointment is not an executive power in the sense that it belongs to the governor as a result of a grant to him in the constitution of the executive power, and in the absence of any provision of statute giving him power to appoint.[66]

5. Authority to Remove.[67] Sometimes the attempt has been made to treat the power to remove as a judicial power. Thus where the constitution has not expressly or impliedly provided that the power to remove is vested in an executive officer, it has been held that an officer may be declared to have forfeited his office only as the result of a judgment of a court.[68] The grant of the executive power to a governor of a state is furthermore not regarded as giving him power to remove an officer.[69] In the case of the president of the United States, however, it has been held that, by reason of the construction placed by congress upon the constitution, the president is to be regarded as possessing the power to remove an officer appointed by him and confirmed by the senate who by law has a fixed term.[70] And a similar rule has been announced as to the powers of the governor

under certain state constitutions.[71] But while the power to remove from office is regarded as a power possessed by the courts, in the absence of its express or implied grant to some other authority in the government, the courts hold that this power may be exercised by the legislature by declaring the office to be vacant, or may be delegated by the legislature to some other authority.[72] Furthermore, it is the universal rule that where the duration of an office is not prescribed by law, the power to remove is an incident of the power to appoint.[73]

B. Appointment[74] — 1. What Constitutes an Appointment. An appointment consists in the choice by the appointing power of the person appointed.[75] The exercise of the appointing power involves the exercise of discretion,[76] and must be accompanied by the intention on the part of the appointing officer to place the person of his choice in the position to be filled.[77] But an intention to appoint will be implied. Thus the continuance in office of a deputy during the second term of the official who originally appointed him is equivalent to a reappoint-

Civil service laws limiting discretion.— Thus if the appointing power has been given to an officer by the constitution, the legislature may not confine his choice so as to oblige him to select some person proposed to him by some other body, as for example one who has obtained the highest mark at a civil service examination. People v. Mosher, 163 N. Y. 32, 57 N. E. 88, 79 Am. St. Rep. 552. ment.[78] After the act of appointment is complete the power of the appointing authority is exhausted. The appointing authority may not revoke its former appointment and make another.[79] The only exception to this statement is to be found in the case of appointments by legislative bodies whose actions in the case of appointments are generally treated like their legislative business and governed by their ordinary rules.[80] Where the appointment of an officer is directed to be made by a legislative body by ballot, the manner of taking the ballot is within the discretion of such body;[81] the appointment does not become absolute until the result of the ballot is ascertained and announced.[82]

2. CONCURRENT ACTION OF DIFFERENT BODIES. Where the appointment is made as the result of a nomination by one authority and confirmation by another, the appointment is not complete until the action of all bodies concerned has been had,[83] and the body which has been intrusted with the power of confirming appointments may reconsider its action before any action based upon its first decision has been taken.[84] Where an appointment is made by a joint meeting of two bodies the majority required is a majority of all and not a majority of the members of each.[85] Where no provision is contained in the constitution that an officer is to be commissioned by the executive the appointment is complete upon the confirmation by the senate or council of the nomination by the executive.[86] But where provision is made for the exercise of a power to commission, the appointment is not complete until the commission has been signed.[87]

3. THE COMMISSION. Where the appointment is not under the law complete until the officer has been commissioned by the authority to whom the law has given the power to sign commissions, and the power to issue commissions has been intrusted to an authority not the same as the appointing authority, the issue of the commission is regarded as a ministerial act,[88] which may be enforced by mandamus.[89] The appointment, however, is complete in such cases when the commission is signed. Its sending to or receipt by the appointee is not necessary to a valid appointment.[90] Where, however, the issue of a commission is not made by law a necessary part of the appointment, the appointment is complete when the choice of the appointing officer has been made,[91] and no written evidence of the appointment is necessary. An oral appointment is valid.[92] Indeed it has frequently been held that the fact that one has acted as an officer and has generally been recognized as such will create the presumption of a valid appointment.[93] Such presumption may, however, be overcome by evidence to the contrary.[94] The commission is merely prima facie evidence of title to the office and is not conclusive.[95] And since it in itself confers no title it may be revoked and another issued in case mistake has been made in the names stated therein.[96]

4. Time of Appointment. An appointment may not be made to an office which is not vacant.[97] It naturally follows from this rule that a prospective appointment to fill a vacancy which has not yet occurred, unless specially provided for by law, is improper,[98] except where the appointment is made to fill a vacancy sure to occur, and is made by an authority which is empowered to fill such vacancy when it arises.[99] But an appointment to a new office to take effect on the establishment of such office may be made before the law establishing such office goes into effect;[1] and, where the appointing power has the arbitrary power of removal, the appointment of a successor of the present incumbent operates as a removal of the latter.[2]

5. Compliance With Formalities. In accordance with the usual rule that omnia præsumuntur rite acta an appointment will be presumed to have been made in accordance with the law.[3] At the same time the appointing power must comply with the formalities prescribed by law in order that an appointment be valid,[4] and the appointment of an ineligible person is an absolute nullity,[5] except that the official acts of such a person are regarded as the acts of an officer de facto.[6]

6. Preference of Discharged Soldiers, Sailors, or Marines.[7] Sometimes either the constitution or a statute gives preference in appointment to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors from the army and navy of the United States. The tendency of the courts is to give such provisions a somewhat narrow construction and to hold that the legislature may not, under the ordinary state constitution, exempt such soldiers and sailors from the examinations which are by law required of others for appointment to office.[8] But laws giving soldiers and sailors preference over those having equal qualifications would seem to be proper. Such laws not only limit the discretion of the appointing power but confer rights under the law upon veterans which are enforceable before the courts.[9] In the interpretation of such laws the courts hold that the preference is accorded by them only to such soldiers and sailors as are physically and mentally qualified to perform the duties of the offices to which they apply to be appointed,[10] and that the veteran, to enjoy the preference, must bring the fact that he is entitled to this privilege to the attention of the appointing power.[11]

Preference over those of equal qualifications.— Under a statute providing for the preference of honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the Civil war, residents of the state, in the public service, over those of equal qualifications, but that neither age nor physical infirmity shall be considered in passing on their qualifications, unless these are such as to render them incompetent to perform the duties required, an honorably discharged soldier or sailor is not entitled to a preference unless his qualifications to discharge the duties exacted are equal to those of his competitors. 7. Collateral Inquiry Into Validity or Regularity of Appointment. The validity or regularity of the appointment or election of a public officer cannot be inquired into in an action to which he is not a party.[12] The only possible exceptions to this rule are: (1) When the appointment or election of ineligible persons is made by law absolutely void;[13] and (2) where an office, the acts of whose incumbent are in question, has not been legally established.[14] This rule has been applied to criminal as well as to civil actions,[15] and is enforced against the sureties on an official bond.[16] But in an action to which an officer is not a party enough inquiry into the validity of his title may be made to determine whether he is an intruder, since the acts of an intruder may be treated as null and void in any proceeding.[17] Furthermore it is not proper to impeach the title of an officer in all suits to which he may be a party. Thus it is held that in such an action the officer may not deny that he has been legally appointed or elected.[18] Finally it is commonly held that the title to office may not be tried in an action for salary where plaintiff is not the actual incumbent of the office in question.[19]

legislature,[21] or the body competent under the constitution to regulate the official relation, and the legislature is not precluded from requiring qualifications for an office additional to those required of an elector, by a constitutional provision to the effect that no person shall be elected or appointed to any office in a state unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector.[22] But where the constitution itself prescribes in detail the qualifications for office the legislature may not add to or diminish them.[23]

b. When Qualifications Must Be Present. The question as to when the qualifications necessary for legal appointment or election to office shall exist is one to which different answers have been given. Most of the cases hold that the term "eligible" as used in a constitution or statute means capacity to be chosen, and that therefore the qualifications must exist at the time of election or appointment.[24] Indeed some cases go so far as to hold that, where suit is brought to oust one from office who is alleged to be ineligible, defendant may become eligible by taking the required oath or by resigning an incompatible office even after the beginning of the suit.[25] A constitutional requirement that officers shall be registered voters does not become operative until a registration law has been enacted.[26]

e. Sex.[27] The question of the eligibility of women to hold office is often determined by the constitution as that is interpreted by the courts. Thus where the constitution confines the holding of office to qualified electors who are elsewhere defined as "male citizens" women may not be made eligible to hold office by statute.[28] But in the absence of a constitutional inhibition women may be made eligible to office by statute even if such statute is retrospective in its operation.[29] Statutes will not, however, be liberally construed so as to authorize the eligibility of women.[30]

d. Citizenship and Residence.[31] Citizenship, although usually expressly required either by the constitution or statutes, would not seem in the absence of such requirement to be an absolutely necessary qualification for office,[32] particularly in the case of officers having jurisdiction outside the territorial limits of the state, such as commissioners to take acknowledgments.[33] But it has sometimes been held that it is a necessary qualification for elective office even in the absence of a constitutional or statutory provision to that effect.[34] Residence within the district over which the jurisdiction of the office extends is often also made a necessary qualification by statute. In the absence of such an express provision, however, there would seem to be no reason for holding that residence within the district is necessary to eligibility, provided the other qualifications mentioned in the statute are present. But a provision of statute requiring residence must be observed.[35] Further it is usually held that the legislative authority may provide the qualification of residence for a certain number of years.[36] Residence is not lost by absence from the district on official business.[37] The question of what is residence is one of law to be determined by the consideration of the intention and overt acts of the person whose acts are being examined.[38] provide a property qualification for office.[40] In a number of the states, however, such property qualifications are not permitted by the constitution,[41] but in England they are quite common.[42]

f. Religious or Political Belief. The general provisions in the state constitutions prohibiting "tests" for holding office are usually so construed as to prevent the requirement by the legislature of religious and political qualifications.[43] But a statute which provides for a board or commission of a certain number, no more than a certain proportion of whose members shall belong to the same political party, is not regarded as providing a political qualification.[44] It is doubtful if such a provision would be enforced by courts.[45]

g. Age.[46] It would appear to be the rule of the common law that minors may not hold offices, the performance of whose duties requires the exercise of judgment and discretion; but that they are qualified for ministerial offices.[47] But it is frequently the case that either the constitution or a statute provides that to be qualified for office one must have attained his majority or even a greater age.[48] Finally, either the constitution or a statute sometimes provides that no one may hold specific offices, such as judicial offices, after he has attained a certain age, such as seventy years. Such provisions do not usually affect the lower judicial offices, such as surrogates,[49] and justices of the peace.[50]

h. Civil Service Laws.[51] In both the United States national government and in some of the state governments, and particularly in certain of the city governments, provision has been made for the establishment of what are known as civil service commissions. The duties of these bodies are to enforce the civil service laws which have provided qualifications of capacity, either physical or intellectual, for public offices. Where the power of appointment has been vested by the constitution in some officer or body such laws have generally been regarded as unconstitutional so far as they attempt to restrict the discretion of the appointing authority,[52] particularly where they attempt so to restrict such discretion as to make the act of appointment a mere ministerial one, such as the selection of the person standing highest on the list of persons eligible to appointment.[53] But where the power of appointment is not vested in an authority by the constitution there would seem to be no question with regard to the power of the legislature to impose limitations upon the discretion of the appointing officer, or to authorize some other body, such as a state or local civil service commission, to impose such limitations.[54] It would also seem proper under such conditions for the legislature to provide that the appointment should be made as a result of the selection of the one standing highest on a list made up of the successful contestants at competitive examinations.[55] Finally, if provision is made in the constitution for civil service examinations, such provision is held to be in large measure self-executing.[56] Certainly the attempt on the part of the legislature to exempt certain classes in the community and certain positions in the service will be reviewed by the courts and may be declared unconstitutional.[57] Furthermore, in a proper proceeding the regulations of the proper authorities intrusted with the exercise of the constitutional or statutory provisions as to the civil service, although unassailable in collateral proceedings,[58] may in a proper proceeding be reviewed by the Federal laws.— The question has never been raised in the courts in the case of the United States civil service law. The heads of the executive departments of the United States government are regarded as having a power of appointment vested in them by the constitution, and therefore it has not been attempted to oblige them to appoint the one standing highest on an eligible list. See 13 Op. Atty.-Gen. 516. While the courts have not as yet been called upon to determine the constitutionality of the provision that appointments shall be made from a number of nominees, the attorney-general has given a favorable opinion (4 Op. Atty.-Gen. 164), and it would seem that the supreme court if called upon would take the same view. See U. S. v. Perkins, 116 U. S. 483, 6 S. Ct. 449, 29 L. ed. 700. In this case it was held that congress may limit the power of removal when it vests the power of appointment in heads of departments.

Suppl. 485], holding that Const. (1894) art. 5, § 9, providing that appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state and the civil divisions thereof shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained as far as practicable by competitive examinations, contemplates that all appointments and promotions shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained by competitive examinations, unless it is in good faith found that it is impracticable so to determine the relative merit and fitness of persons for a particular position, and any statute or rule contrary to the provision is void.

courts.[59] Such civil service laws, and regulations adopted pursuant thereto, are regarded not merely as limitations upon the appointing power, but also as conferring rights upon those who have passed the required examinations, of which rights they may not be deprived by the action of administrative officers taken in violation of such laws and regulations.[60]

i. Collateral Inquiry Into Eligibility. The same rules are true with regard to the collateral inquiry into the eligibility of an incumbent of an office as are true of the election or appointment. Eligibility may be questioned only in a direct proceeding to which the officer is a party,[61] and both the officer himself and the sureties upon his bond are estopped from raising the question even in a proceeding to which he or they are parties.[62]

j. Loss of Qualifications. The loss of the qualifications necessary to make one eligible for a public office will generally result in the forfeiture of the office.[63] Thus, where an incumbent of a public office who, to be qualified for the office, must reside in the district, moves out of the district with the intention of remaining permanently out of the district, the office which he holds is regarded as vacant.[64] But if the absence from the district is only temporary such absence is not to be regarded as a removal, as where a county officer in a state was elected to congress and went to Washington, but left his family within the county and the affairs of the county office in the hands of a deputy whom he was authorized by law to appoint.[65] Again an office may become vacant by the loss of the age qualification provided for it by statute.[66] Finally the loss of the qualification of good character as evidenced by conviction of a crime will result in the loss of the office.[67]

2. Disqualification — a. In General. The legislature has, in the absence of constitutional inhibition, the same right to provide disqualifications that it has to provide qualifications for office.[68] But the legislature may not add disqualifications, where the constitution has provided them in such a way as to indicate the intention of its makers that the disqualifications provided shall embrace all that are to be permitted.[69] Furthermore disqualifications provided by the legislature are construed strictly and will not be extended to cases not clearly within their scope.[70]

b. Membership in Body Making Appointment, Creating the Office, or Increasing the Emoluments Thereof. It is contrary to the policy of the law for an officer to use his official appointing power to place himself in office, so that, even in the absence of a statutory inhibition, all officers who have the appointing power are disqualified for appointment to the offices to which they may appoint.[71] The constitutions of a number of the states have applied the same rule to the offices which have been created or whose emoluments have been increased by bodies of which the persons seeking appointment were members at the time the office was created, or the emoluments increased.[72] Such provisions are, however, narrowly construed so as to uphold the eligibility of the appointee wherever possible.[73]

c. Holding Other Office or Employment. It may be laid down as a rule of the common law that the holding of one office does not in and of itself disqualify the incumbent from holding another office at the same time, provided there is no inconsistency in the functions of the two offices in question.[74] But at common law two offices whose functions are inconsistent are regarded as incompatible.[75]

The inconsistency which at common law makes offices incompatible does not consist in the physical impossibility to discharge the duties of both offices;[76] but rather in a conflict of interest, as where the incumbent of one office has the power to remove the incumbent of another,[77] or to audit the accounts of another,[78] or to exercise a supervision over another as in the case of a judicial officer and his subordinate ministerial officer.[79] The constitution or a statute often expressly provides that certain offices shall be incompatible. Such a statutory incompatibility is often inferred from the common provisions in the state constitutions intended to secure the distribution of the three powers of government among the three departments of government.[80] The acceptance of an incompatible office by the incumbent of another office is regarded as a resignation or vacation of the first office.[81] This rule is applied even where the second office is inferior to the first.[82] But the acceptance of a nomination is not regarded as a resignation,[83] even where the person so nominated is actually elected.[84] But incompatible offices must be distinguished from forbidden offices, that is, offices for which the incumbents of certain offices are disqualified by statute. In such case the incumbent of the first office cannot accept the second office and the attempted acceptance of the second office will not be treated as a resignation of the first.[85] It is often provided by the constitution or a statute that the same person shall not hold two lucrative offices.[86] In such case if the two offices are in the same state government the second office is treated as an incompatible office.[87] But if the first office is in the United States government and the second office in a state government, the second office is treated as a forbidden office.[88] The effect of these provisions is largely dependent upon the way in which they are framed. It may, however, be said that the courts construe them in such a way as, where possible, not to deprive parties before them of the privilege of holding offices or positions in the service of the government.[89] Thus they commonly hold that provisions prohibiting the holding of two lucrative offices do not affect positions which are not strictly speaking offices.[90] Thus again it is held that such provisions do not prevent the assignment to one officer of the duties of another where there is no inconsistency between the two classes of duties.[91] But under such a provision the incumbent of one office may not be made ex officio the incumbent of a second office.[92] Furthermore a provision that no one shall be "appointed" to two offices will not prevent his election thereto.[93] The question has often arisen as to whether a provision prohibiting one holding a lucrative office in the United States or a state government from holding another lucrative office "under the state" applies to municipal offices, or other offices popularly considered to be local offices. There are a number of cases which hold that municipal offices are not affected by such a prohibition.[94] But if an officer who is mainly municipal has duties to perform under state laws he is regarded as holding an office "under the state,"[95] and frequently, because of the application of this rule, offices commonly considered to be local, such as town offices, are held to be within the prohibition.[96] A statute prescribing that no candidate for office shall be a superintendent of registration does not render the candidate ineligible to office by reason of the fact that he is a registration officer.[97] A constitutional provision by which certain officers are debarred from holding other offices during their terms is not violated by a statute conferring on such officers new powers and duties.[98] An officer's resignation of a second office after, by its acceptance, he has vacated the first, cannot restore him or otherwise affect the first.[99]

d. Continuous Office Holding. A constitutional provision limiting the time for which office may be held by one person continuously has been held to apply to an officer elected before the adoption of the constitution.[1] But a statute providing that sheriffs shall hold no other office and shall be ineligible for two years next succeeding the termination of their office does not render them ineligible to offices other than sheriff for such period after their term.[2]

e. Default in Payment of Public Funds. Statutes frequently disqualify for public office those who, having in their possession public funds, are in default.[3] Such statutes disqualify only those who have been determined by legal authority to be in default,[4] or admit that they are in such default,[5] and appear generally to be liberally construed in favor of eligibility to office.[6] Thus "default" is said to mean a wilful and corrupt omission to pay over funds.[7]

f. Conviction of Crime, Participation in Rebellion, Etc. The constitution or a statute frequently disqualifies for office one who has been convicted of a felony or a crime generally.[8] Where the constitution contains such a provision it applies to crimes committed under the jurisdiction of the state providing the disqualification and not to crimes against another government.[9] It would seem to be the rule that the pardon of the executive will not remove disqualification resulting from conviction of crime.[10] A disqualification akin to that for conviction of crime is that provided by the fourteenth amendment of the United States constitution which disqualifies for all offices in the federal or state governments those persons who may have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the United States. Such disqualification is held to disqualify only those whose action was voluntary.[11] Holding a civil office in one of the states in rebellion is not regarded as engaging in rebellion.[12] Such disqualification will be enforced by the state courts.[13]

See U. S. v. Powell, 27 Fed. Cas. No. 16,079, 65 N. C. 709, holding that one who as constable of a county in North Carolina took an oath to support the constitution of the United States, and afterward engaged in the rebellion, was disqualified by the fourteenth amendment, unless relieved in the manner provided, to hold any office, state or national, and was therefore indictable for accepting the office of sheriff.

quently provided by statute that persons elected or appointed to office shall qualify within a prescribed time.[15] Such statutory provisions are usually liberally construed in favor of the intending incumbent. Thus they are not regarded as binding upon candidates for office who are ignorant of their appointment or election.[16] Thus again the time within which qualification for office may be made does not begin to run, in the case of a contested election, until the termination of the contest.[17] Finally the law presumes that one who is in actual occupation of an office has duly qualified.[18]

b. Oath.[19] One of the usual necessary formalities for the qualification of an officer is the taking of the official oath. One who is appointed or elected to office and does not take the required official oath does not possess the legal title to the office.[20] The fact that the legislature imposes new duties upon an officer will not require him to take a new oath of office.[21] Official records will be so construed as to uphold the validity of the oath which may have been taken.[22]

c. Bond[23]—(i) DEFINITION. An official bond is an obligation with sureties given by a public officer as security for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office,[24] or, as the term is used in statutes, the bond of a public officer.[25]

Several bonds of the same officer may be official.— Where an officer is required by law to give several bonds for the performance of his duties, no one of them is "the" official bond to the exclusion of the others. Each is an official bond. Anderson v. Thompson,

(II) Necessity.[26] Generally the filing of the official bond is like the taking of the official oath regarded as a necessary prerequisite to the full legal title to the office.[27] In the absence of a contrary statutory provision a person holding two separate offices must give two separate official bonds.[28]

(III) Form and Sufficiency.[29] A bond will not as a general rule be invalidated by technical objections.[30] The sureties must be such as are required by the statute under which the bond is given.[31]

(IV) Approval and Record. Generally before an official bond may be regarded as legally filed it must have been approved by the competent authority. Because of their desire to uphold official bonds courts hold that no express delivery, acceptance, or approval of the bond need be proved, but that if the bond is found in the possession of the proper authorities and the officer enters upon the performance of his duties, the delivery, acceptance, or approval will be regarded as prima facie proven.[32] Where an officer has done all that he can to comply with the law with respect to the giving of a bond, he cannot be deprived of his rights by the unlawful act or wilful refusal upon the part of another officer to perform a duty imposed upon him with regard to such bond.[33] The approval of a bond may be enforced by mandamus in case the duty is ministerial, but the discretion of an officer as to approval cannot be so controlled.[34] It is important to apply for a mandamus, for if no application is made the matter may not be brought up in a collateral proceeding.[35] An authority is justified in refusing to approve an official bond if the sureties are absent so much from the state as to leave their domicile in doubt,[36] or when questioned refuse to answer with regard to their pecuniary condition.[37] Under some statutes the decision of the officer empowered to pass upon the sufficiency of sureties is final.[38] A declaration in an action for damages brought against officers for their failure to approve an official bond must distinctly allege the facts which make the bond good and sufficient.[39] Where no separate book is kept for the recording of official bonds it has been held sufficient that they be recorded in the book of mortgages.[40]

(v) New or Additional Bonds. Where the bond given is insufficient or defective, provision is made, under some statutes, for the requiring of an additional or new bond.[41] The legislature has power to change the law with regard to official bonds and to exact new and additional bonds variant in condition, penalty, obligation, and surety, from those executed under the existing law under which the officer was inducted into and held office.[42] A statute providing that, where certain of the sureties of the bond have removed or become insolvent, or some of the sureties petition for a release, the place of such insufficient or released sureties may be supplied by new sureties does not authorize the taking of a new surety merely because one of the sureties has died.[43]

d. Effect of Failure to Qualify. In many cases the statute provides that one who does not take the oath within a prescribed time vacates or forfeits the office.[44] A similar provision is often made with regard to the official bond.[45] The courts have taken different views with regard to the effect of such provisions. Many of the decisions may be reconciled if we clearly distinguish the classes of cases which may arise. In the first place we have the cases in which an officer has failed to take the oath or file the bond within the specified time but does so after the time. Under these conditions the courts usually decide that there is a vacancy even where there is no judicial determination to that effect, and if the authority having the power to fill a vacancy has made an appointment, they regard such appointee as the incumbent of the office.[46] There are a number of cases also which hold that statutes providing that offices shall be vacant if the bond is not filed within a certain time are applicable only where the failure to file such bond is due to the negligence of the officer.[47] Finally, it is universally held, in order to uphold the validity of official action, that the rule with regard to de facto officers will be applied in case an official incumbent discharges official duties before taking the official oath or filing the bond,[48] and that the sureties on his official bond are not discharged as the result of any irregularity in his qualification.[49] Indeed a liberal rule of construction is usually applied in these cases in order to uphold the validity of the title to office.[50]

D. De Facto Officers[51] — 1. In General. One of the rules of the English common law was to the effect that the acts of one who, although not the holder of a legal office, was actually in possession of it under some color of title or under such conditions as indicated the acquiescence of the public in his action, could not be impeached in any suit to which such person was not a party. an unconstitutional statute is regarded by some of the courts as not legally in existence and as therefore not forming any basis for the application of this rule as to de facto officers. It is therefore laid down as a general proposition that there can be no de facto officer where there is no office de jure.[54] Other courts have, however, refused to recognize the rule that there can be no de facto office, but have held that an unconstitutional law establishing an office may, until such law has been declared unconstitutional, be regarded as conferring color of title and that the incumbent of such an office should be treated as a de facto officer.[55] Furthermore it is in general held that the legality of a de facto municipal corporation cannot be attacked except in a direct action generally in the nature of a quo warranto. Therefore officers of a de facto municipal corporation are regarded as de facto officers.[56] If, however, the office is legally in existence it is almost universally held that one who holds such office under a title derived from an unconstitutional statute is to be treated as a de facto officer.[57]

3. Possession of the Office. One of the fundamental prerequisites to the existence of a de facto officer is the possession of the office and the performance of the duties attached to it.[58] But such possession need not be physically continuous. Thus, where an office is in dispute, and the one in actual possession steps out with no intention of abandoning the office, and the other claimant with full knowledge of the facts steps in and proceeds to do business, the one who previously had possession of the office is considered to be the officer de facto.[59] It follows as a necessary consequence that there cannot be a de facto officer if a de jure officer is discharging the functions of the office in question.[60] There cannot be two different officers de facto in possession of an office for which one incumbent only is provided by law.[61]

4. Color of Title. But the mere fact of the possession of the office is not sufficient to make the incumbent a de facto officer. Either he must have color of title or his possession must be acquiesced in by the public. The mere possessor of an office without these other conditions is an intruder whose acts have legally no effect.[62] Color of title to the office may be defined as apparent right to the office. Such apparent right is usually to be found in a certificate of election or a commission of appointment, which certificate or commission is void because some other person is entitled thereto,[63] because the election is irregular,[64] or because the incumbent has been irregularly appointed,[65] or appointed by an authority not competent under the law to make the appointment.[66] One who holds over after the expiration of his legal term is also commonly regarded as a de facto officer.[67] So also is one a de facto officer who performs official duties before taking the official oath or filing the official bond.[68] Persons having color of title are regarded as de facto officers even though legally they are not eligible for the position which they desire to hold.[69] But color of title ceases to exist after a court has passed unfavorably upon the claim of the one actually in possession of the office,[70] or where the defect in title is such that persons dealing with the officer must have had notice of it.[71] It would seem also that persons in actual possession of an office, whose possession is acquiesced in for a considerable time by the public, are de facto officers, although they do not possess color of title.[72]

5. Rights and Duties. As the rule regarding de facto officers has been adopted merely with the idea of protecting the public, the de facto officer is not permitted to benefit personally from what is legally a usurpation of the office. He thus has no claim to the emoluments of the office.[73] As a necessary consequence the de facto officer is liable to the de jure officer for the emoluments of the office

Statutory provisions.— The general rule is sometimes changed by statute. See Wilson v. Fisher, 140 Cal. 188, 73 Pac. 850, where it was held that the California statute provided that in case of a contest for office the claim-obtained during the time he has wrongfully occupied the office.[74] Furthermore a de facto officer may not shield himself through his de facto character from the responsibility for acts which may be justified only because of the fact that he is an officer. That is, an officer may be called upon to prove that he has the de jure title when he brings a suit in his official character,[75] or when he is sued.[76] The only exception to the rule that the question of official title may be raised in a suit to which the officer is a party is to be found in cases where the interests of the public are alone concerned when it is held that the title must be tried in direct proceedings to try title to office.[77] Furthermore, while the general theory is that the de facto officer can build up no rights he is still, because of the rule that he may not impeach his own title to office,[78] liable for damages caused by his negligence in the performance of the duties of the office of which he is the de facto incumbent,[79] and may be forced by mandamus or other appropriate proceeding to perform these duties,[80] or punished criminally for the performance of acts which when done by an officer are crimes.[81] But resistance to a de facto officer is punishable under a statute punishing resistance to officers,[82] and an officer de facto is not guilty of murder if he kills one under circumstances which would justify his act had he the de jure title.[83] Finally, it has been held that public funds expended by a de facto officer for a lawful purpose may not be recovered from him.[84]

E. Deputies and Assistants[85] — 1. In General. At common law public officers may appoint deputies for the discharge of ministerial duties.[86] In addition to the deputies permitted by the common law, deputies are often provided by statute, when they may perform any act which may be performed by the principal officer unless their powers are expressly limited.[87] Where provision is made by statute for the position of deputy, such deputy is regarded as a public officer;[88] but a deputy for whom no provision is made in the law and who is appointed by his officer to suit his own convenience is regarded as the agent or servant of such officer.[89]

which the office may be held.[95] The duration of the term of office is usually fixed by express constitutional or statutory provisions.[96] Where the statute fixing the term is uncertain, that interpretation should be followed which limits the term to the shortest period.[97] Where, however, the term of office is not fixed by law, the officer is regarded as holding at the will of the appointing power on the theory that the power of removal is incident to the power of appointment.[98] Such appointments at pleasure, if made by a board, are unaffected by a change in the personnel of the board.[99] A constitutional provision that terms of office not fixed by the constitution shall not exceed a specified time does not enlarge the duration of an office held at the pleasure of the executive.[1] Where an office is created by a statute, the term of which is fixed by the constitution to be during good behavior, the officer holds only so long as the statute remains in force.[2] Where a law providing for the appointment of officers by the governor and limited to a period of years is continued by a subsequent law for a further period, in the absence of an indication to the contrary the commissions of officers continue only for the time to which the law was originally limited.[3] Where the office is to be filled by one authority and the duration of the term is to be determined by another, the declaration of such duration must be made before the office is filled, so that each authority may have its legitimate exercise.[4]

b. Power of Legislature.[5] The power to fix the term of an office is, unless otherwise provided, possessed by the body which under the law may create the office, ordinarily the legislature.[6] But if the constitution fixes the term of office such term may not be changed by the legislature.[7] In case the legislature provides for a longer term than is permitted by the constitution, the act is good as to the term permitted by the constitution, and is void only as to the excess;[8] and an officer appointed for a fixed term who, as provided by the constitution, should have been appointed for a shorter term and one whose term is not fixed holds at the will of the appointing power.[9] Such constitutional provisions are usually so worded that they are construed as affecting offices established by the legislature as well as those established by the constitution.[10] In case the constitution providing for an office fixes no time for the commencement of the term, the authority to fix the term is vested in the legislature.[11]

e. Change of Term. The legislature may change the term of an office even during the term of the incumbent,[12] except where the constitution fixes the duration of the term;[13] and when the constitution provides for elective offices the legislature may not extend the term of the official incumbent of an elective office.[14] But legislation, which to secure uniformity in official terms, postpones the date of an election for a reasonable time is not usually regarded as violating the constitution. bond[19] will not change the term from that which has been prescribed by statute with reference to the office.

d. Beginning of Term. The term of office, when not provided by statute, begins in the case of elective offices on the date of election,[20] and in the case of appointive offices on the date of the appointment,[21] except where under the statute the appointee has a certain time within which to qualify, in which case the term begins at the time of qualification.[22] In the case of appointive offices the beginning of the term of the first appointee determines the limits of the terms of successive appointees, so that one appointed in the middle of the term, because of the vacation of an office during the term of an incumbent, or because of his holding over, is not appointed for longer than the unexpired term.[23] This rule is not, however, usually applied in the case of elective officers, where the law provides that they shall be elected for a term of a specified number of years.[24] In some cases by the constitution or statute one appointed to fill a vacancy in an elective office is appointed to hold until the next election.[25] Where, on expiration of the term of the incumbent, one is appointed to an office by the governor during a recess of the senate and is afterward confirmed by the senate, the term begins at the time of the governor's appointment and is subject only to the approval of the senate.[26] But if the appointment may by law be made only until the end of the next session of the senate, the appointment made during the recess and afterward confirmed is revoked by the confirmation, which marks the beginning of a new term.[27]

Where continuity of terms has been broken.— Where the constitution provides the term for which offices shall be held, and that officers shall hold until their successors have been elected and qualified, it has been held that where there has been an unbroken succession of terms from the adoption of the constitution, and no general acquiescence in a different day or time, the commencement of the officer's term is governed by the time at which the term of the officer in office, when the constitution took effect, expired; but where the regular succession of terms has been broken, either by intervening vacancies or other incidental causes, the term of a newly elected officer begins when the regular term or the provisional term, as the case may be, of his predecessor expires. 2. Holding Over. An officer elected for a specific term and until his successor is elected and qualified may hold over for an indefinite period, if no successor is elected and qualified.[28] One who holds over after the expiration of his term, where no provision is made by statute for holding over, is, although not regarded as in most respects a de jure officer,[29] entitled to the salary appended to the office.[30] Nor may one holding over be punished as an intruder.[31] Where, however, provision is made by statute for holding over, the hold-over is regarded as in all respects a de jure officer, and the expiration of the term does not produce a vacancy which may be filled by the authority having the power to appoint to fill vacancies.[32] Such provisions do not, however, give a tenure of office which may

Where officer appointed or chosen for specific term.— It has been said that there is no common-law rule by which a public officer appointed or chosen for a specified term can hold office beyond that term upon the failure of the proper body to appoint or elect a successor. People v. Tieman, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 193, 8 Abb. Pr. 359.

Termination of office.— Where the constitution provides for the creation of an office by the legislature, and the office is created with the provision that the incumbent shall be appointed and commissioned for a specified period, the office does not expire at the expiration of such period, but the appointee holds over until his successor is qualified. Walker v. Ferrill, 58 Ga. 512.

Under constitutional or statutory provision.— Where one is lawfully in possession of an office under a constitutional or statutory provision to the effect that he shall hold over until his successor is elected and qualified, his right to hold over continues until a qualified successor has been elected by the same electoral party as that to which such incumbent owes his election, or which by law is entitled to elect a successor. People v. Hardy, 8 Utah 68, 29 Pac. 1118. The word "elected," in Oreg. Const. art. 15, § 1, providing that public officers shall remain in office until their successors are "elected and qualified," does not refer solely to a selection by the people, but includes a choice by the legislative assembly. State v. Compson, 34 Oreg. 25, 54 Pac. 349. See Carter v. McFarland, 75 Iowa 196, 39 N. W. 268 (holding that a statute providing that an officer may qualify anew when he holds over by reason of the non-election of a successor or for the neglect or refusal of the successor to qualify does not authorize an incumbent to requalify where the board entitled to elect his successor has chosen a successor and taken an adjournment for the purpose of ascertaining whether such successor will accept and has elected another officer at the adjourned meeting, where the person first elected has refused to accept); State v. Boyd, 31 Nebr. 682, 48 N. not be forfeited by proper proceedings, as for removal for cause.[33] Nor do they give a claim to office to one whose term has been terminated by the qualification of a successor, if such successor dies before his term begins. In such case there is a vacancy in the office which should be filled in the proper way.[34] In some cases such provisions are regarded as imposing upon the incumbent of the office the duty of continuing in the office after the expiration of his term.[35] But where the right to resign is recognized such provisions are sometimes not regarded as taking it away.[36] Finally in case one holds over under such a statute in an elective office, statutes are, if possible, so construed as to provide for an election to fill the office at the election next succeeding the expiration of the term.[37] One who has accepted and exercised an office under a new appointment cannot claim that his tenure is a continuation of that under his original appointment.[38] So, although an officer may be entitled to hold when the legislature declares the office vacant, yet if he becomes a candidate for reëlection and is reëlected, his accepting and holding the office amounts to a surrender of his former title and he holds by virtue of his last election only.[39]

3. Vacancies in Office — a. Existence of Vacancy. A vacancy in office exists only where there is no person authorized by law to discharge the duties of the office. Therefore there is no vacancy in the office where there is a de jure incumbent of such office actually in possession of it.[40] The reasons for which an office will become vacant are to be fixed by the legislature, whose powers are liberally construed. Thus, it may, unless inhibited by the constitution, add new causes producing vacancy in office to those already provided in the constitution.[41]

The courts have, however, laid down the rule that, even in the absence of legislative provision, an office becomes vacant, when its incumbent accepts an incompatible office in the same state government or in the government of the United States.[42] But acceptance of a state office will not, under a state statute, vacate an office in the United States government, nor does the acceptance by an officer of a nomination for an election to an incompatible office vacate the office.[43] A vacancy in office, for any of the causes enumerated in the statute, occurs usually at the time of the happening of the event whose occurrence is by the statute the cause of the vacancy, and no judicial determination that a vacancy has occurred is necessary.[44] The only exception to this rule is to be found in the case that the vacancy is caused by misconduct on the part of the officer.[45] An office becomes vacant also by the death of the incumbent during his term of office.[46] But a vacancy in an office is not deemed to occur as a result of the death of one elected to office before the beginning of the new term, where the deceased has not qualified and where the term of the incumbent is until his successor has qualified.[47] There is no such vacancy, however, where there is no provision for holding over,[48] or, if there is such a provision, where the deceased qualified before his death.[49] In the case of an office held jointly by two or more persons the death of one of the incumbents will not vacate the office as to the others.[50]

b. Power to Fill Vacancies. In the absence of any constitutional or statutory provision, power to elect or appoint to office is to be regarded as including the power to fill vacancies.[51] The power to fill vacancies is not, however, a part of the executive power granted to the governor by the constitution.[52] But, in order to escape the inconvenience resulting from an interregnum, the power to fill vacancies is usually granted to some executive or administrative authority which is always capable of acting.[53] This authority in the United States government is the president,[54] and in the state governments is often the governor.[55] Where such a power is contained in a statute and the constitution provides for elective offices, such provision is regarded as unconstitutional if it provides for appointment for a term extending beyond the next election.[56] In these cases, as well as in others specially provided in the statutes, the vacancy, if occurring more than a certain number of days before an election, is to be filled by election.[57] Where this is the rule the kind of election, as for example election for "local" or "state" officers, is prescribed in the statutes. Such a provision is mandatory, and an election held contrary to it is void.[58] De facto officers may make a good appointment to fill a vacancy.[59] Inasmuch as the power to fill the office for the full term is not usually possessed by the authority having power to fill vacancies, nice questions often arise as to whether a vacancy exists which may be filled by the latter authority. The power to fill vacancies is narrowly construed.[60] This principle of narrow construction is applied where the power to fill vacancies given to the executive is limited to vacancies occurring during the recess of the senate. Thus the executive may not appoint to a vacancy occurring during the session.[61] The usual rule is that a vacancy exists which may be filled by the authority having power to fill vacancies, where the authority having power to fill the office permanently has adjourned without filling the office. This rule applies also to newly created offices.[62] But where the power to fill vacancies is limited to the recess of the senate, the creation of a new office during the session does not create a vacancy.[63] And vacancies do not exist on the expiration of the fixed term of the incumbent, where under the law he is to hold over.[64] The term of one appointed to fill a vacancy depends for its length upon the constitution or statute which regulates the power to fill vacancies. Thus, in the United States national government, the term of such an officer cannot be extended beyond the end of the next session of congress and may be cut short by a permanent appointment.[65] In many of the states, however, as a result either of a statute or of judicial decision, the term expires in the case of elective offices, on the qualification of the successor of the person filling the vacancy, who is chosen at the first general election after the vacancy occurs.[66] In the case of appointive offices it is not uncommonly provided that the term of one appointed to fill a vacancy shall expire at the expiration of the term of the preceding incumbent.[67] One elected or appointed to fill a vacancy is also, in the absence of statutory provision, presumed to be elected or appointed for the unexpired term.[68] One elected or appointed to fill a vacancy holds over in the same way as would the person whose place he takes.[69]

G. Resignation, Suspension, or Removal[70] — 1. Resignation. The recognition of a right to resign office may result in an interregnum. Therefore the courts, when not governed in their decisions by statutory provisions, recognize no such right to resign if its exercise will result in a vacancy.[71] Where, however, the exercise of the right to resign will not produce an interregnum which will be productive of injury to private rights, the right to resign is recognized.[72] As a general rule the acceptance of the resignation by the proper authority is necessary to its validity.[73] Acceptance of the resignation would not seem, however, to be necessary in the case of offices which take all of the time of the incumbent, particularly offices in the federal government.[74] Where the resignation to be valid must be accepted, no formal method of acceptance is necessary.[75] Where the absolute right to resign is recognized, resignation will be deemed to be complete when the office is relinquished and no formal method of resignation is necessary. In the absence of statute to the contrary office may be resigned by parol.[76] So a resignation may be either express or by implication,[77] as for example, from the acceptance of an incompatible office,[78] except in those cases in which the right to resign is not recognized,[79] or by removal from the state or district where residence in the state or district is one of the necessary qualifications for office;[80] but the intention to resign must be present.[81] An unconditional resignation which has been transmitted to the authority entitled to receive it,[82] and a resignation implied from the acceptance of an incompatible office, may not be withdrawn.[83] But a resignation conditional in character or to take effect in the future may be withdrawn.[84]

2. Abandonment. Office may also be terminated by abandonment. Abandonment means failure to perform the duties of the office.[85] But a mere partial neglect or non-user is not regarded as evidence of its abandonment.[86] Nor will failure on the part of a superseded incumbent to keep up a clamor for reinstatement or ity which by law has the right to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation. Fryer v. Norton, 67 N. J. L. 537, 52 Atl. 476.

Involuntary abandonment.— It has been held that a statute providing that an office becomes vacant by the ceasing of the incumbent to discharge the duties of the office for a period of three consecutive months, except when prevented by sickness or when absent from the state by permission of the legislature, contemplates a "voluntary" abandonment or nonuser of the office for three consecutive months, and an involuntary failure on the part of the incumbent to perform the duties of his office, caused by his incarceration for a felony during the statutory period, does not operate as an abandonment of the office. Bergerow v. Parker, 4 Cal. App. 169, 87 Pac. 248.

to take legal proceedings therefor,[87] or the fact that the officer does not compel a forcible ouster from the possession of the office room, books, records, etc.,[88] be regarded as an abandonment. The determination of the question whether an officer has abandoned his office is dependent upon his overt acts rather than upon his declared intentions. Thus one who, disclaiming any intention to abandon his office, left it for seventeen months was held to have abandoned it.[89] It need not be determined judicially that an office has been abandoned in order that in a collateral proceeding the office be deemed to have been abandoned;[90] and in subsequent proceedings, either to regain possession of the office or otherwise, one who has abandoned an office is estopped from asserting a claim to such office.[91]

3. Suspension. The power to suspend an officer pending charges may be given by statute in the absence of a constitutional inhibition, and its exercise by the competent authority under the statute does not violate any constitutional right of officers.[92] Where no express power to suspend has been granted the courts do not recognize that the power is included within the arbitrary power to remove, for the exercise of the power to suspend will produce an interregnum in office. The ends of discipline in such a case may be sufficiently subserved by the exercise of the power of removal and do not require the recognition of a power to suspend.[93] But where the power of removal is limited to cause, the power to suspend, made use of as a disciplinary power pending charges, is regarded as included within the power of removal.[94] Power to suspend may be exercised without notice to the person suspended,[95] and the suspension, when made in the exercise of a legal power to suspend, is irreviewable by the courts,[96] and takes effect from the time that the order of suspension is issued and served.[97] But where the power to suspend pending decision on charges to remove is given to one authority and the power to remove is given to another the acquittal on the removal charges acts as a reinstatement of the one suspended.[98] A suspension from office will not make the one suspended ineligible for a succeeding term of the same office;[99] but does make him ineligible for the remainder of the same term until his reinstatement, or the withdrawal of the charges.[1] During suspension the officer is not entitled, in the absence of statutory provision, to the salary attached to the office.[2] Nor is he entitled in case of reinstatement to the reimbursement of the expenses to which he may have been put in defending himself against any charges made against him.[3] The powers of a federal officer suspended by the president are not revived by the failure of the senate to confirm the permanent appointment of the person appointed to fill the vacancy.[4]

4. REMOVAL FROM OFFICE — a. In General. As the right to hold office is not a vested right the legislature may within the limits of the constitution provide methods by which the incumbents of office may be removed from office before the expiration of their terms.[5] But the legislature may not provide methods of removing officers inconsistent with the provisions of the constitution.[6] If we consider the methods thus provided from the view point of the removing authority, we may distinguish three methods of removal, namely, judicial, executive, legislative.

b. Removal by Courts. The powers of removal from office possessed by the courts may be distinguished as the power to forfeit an office for one of the causes specified by law,[7] the power on quo warranto or similar proceedings[8] to oust one from office who has illegally taken possession thereof, and the power by special judicial proceedings to remove from office as a disciplinary power. As these special judicial proceedings are based upon a statute,[9] the provisions of the statute must be followed.[10] Such methods of removal are often treated as partaking of

Are judicial proceedings.— The origination and trial of the impeachment of a public officer is a judicial proceeding. Beall v. Beall, 8 Ga. 210, 228.

Persons who may institute.— It is sometimes held that the proceedings may not be initiated by a private person. Wishek v. Becker, 10 N. D. 63, 84 N. W. 590; Com. v. Sutherland, 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 145; Minnehaha County v. Thorne, 6 S. D. 449, 61 N. W. 688. Contra, Woods v. Varnum, 85 Cal. 639, 24 Pac. 843; Hays v. Simmons, 6 Ida. 651, 59 Pac. 182; Skeen v. Paine, (Utah 1907) 90 Pac. 440. See Corker v. Pence, 12 Ida. 152, 85 Pac. 388, holding that under Rev. St. (1887) § 7459, a corrupt official may be prosecuted by a private person for acts therein specified, while, under section 7445, the accusation must be by prosecuting attorney or presented by grand jury for other wilful or corrupt misconduct. In other cases the proceedings may be initiated by a private person with the consent of the court. Smith v. Brennan, 49 Tex. 681; State v. Box, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 435, 78 S. W. 982. Contra, State v. Whitlock, 41 Ark. 403. But it has been held that even if under the statute the accusation is to be made by a private person such person is not a party plaintiff so as to entitle him to judgment for such sum as the court may authorize to be awarded to the prosecuting officer (Pugh v. Miller, 27 Ind. App. 522, 61 N. E. 739); nor is he responsi-

the nature of a criminal action.[11] At the same time the strictness which has to be observed in criminal proceedings is not usually required. Thus, it is quite common not to require that the accusation shall, like an indictment, have reference only to a single offense.[12] In these cases of removals by courts the courts ble for costs (Rowe v. Bateman, 153 Ind. 633, 54 N. E. 1065, 55 N. E. 754).

Who may be proceeded against.— Under Utah Rev. St. (1898) § 4580, authorizing proceedings to remove from office officials guilty of charging and collecting illegal fees for services rendered, an officer who is not paid by fee, but who receives a fixed salary, may be proceeded against. Skeen v. Craig, 31 Utah 20, 86 Pac. 487.

Abatement.— The resignation of an officer pending proceedings to remove him for malfeasance does not abate the proceedings, but they may be continued for the purpose of determining his eligibility for the remainder of the term, or a succeeding term (State v. Dart, 57 Minn. 261, 59 N. W. 190), but otherwise resignation may take place pending proceedings to remove and will cause such proceedings to abate (Roberts v. Paul, 50 W. Va. 528, 40 S. E. 470).

11. Alabama.— State v. Tally, 102 Ala. 25, 15 So. 722, holding that guilt of respondent must be established beyond a reasonable doubt.

California.— Kilburn v. Law, 111 Cal. 237, 43 Pac. 615; In re Stow, 98 Cal. 587, 33 Pac. 490, applying the principle of strict construction which is so uniformly applied in criminal proceedings. But see In re Curtis, 108 Cal. 661, 41 Pac. 793.

Georgia.— Cobb v. Smith, 102 Ga. 585, 27 S. E. 763.

Idaho.— Smith v. Ellis, 7 Ida. 196, 61 Pac. 695, holding that the state is a proper party plaintiff. But compare Rankin v. Jauman, 4 Ida. 53, 36 Pac. 502, holding that Rev. St. (1887) § 7459, providing for a summary hearing and removal of an officer for misdemeanors or corruption in office, and a judgment in favor of the informer, with costs, does not violate the constitutional provision which requires an information or indictment in criminal cases.

South Dakota.— Minnehaha County v. Thorne, 6 S. D. 449, 61 N. W. 688, in which it is held that because of the principle adopted in these cases, which requires the strictest possible construction, a complaint under the statute which does not allege that the county commissioners have brought the action in their official capacity is demurrable.

But see Skeen v. Paine, (Utah 1907) 90 Pac. 440, holding that the proceedings specified by Rev. St. (1898) § 4580, for the removal of public officers for misconduct, are civil, and not criminal, so that, where the facts are not in dispute, the trial court may direct a verdict of guilty on the law applicable to the facts, but holding that in such a prosecution, however, the rules governing the introduction of evidence in criminal cases must be followed, and the guilt of defendant must be established with the same degree of positive proof as is required in criminal prosecutions generally.

Necessity of indictment on removal because of crime see INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS, 22 Cyc. 183 note 71.

Presentment by grand jury.— Accusations for removal from office for malfeasance must be presented by a grand jury. State v. Richardson, (N. D. 1906) 109 N. W. 1026.

Requisites of information.— An information under Ida. Rev. St. (1887) § 7459, for the purpose of removal of a public officer from office, must contain language sufficient to charge defendant with being guilty of charging and collecting illegal fees for services rendered, or sufficient to charge him with refusing or neglecting to perform official duties pertaining to his office, and should be made positively when the facts are of record or within the personal knowledge of defendant, and otherwise on information and belief. Corker v. Ward, 12 Ida. 165, 85 Pac. 392; Corker v. Pence, 12 Ida. 152, 85 Pac. 388.

Objections to complaint.— In proceedings under N. D. Rev. Code (1905), § 9646, or N. D. Rev. Code (1899), § 7838, for the removal of public officials, it is proper to object to the accusation on any ground one might assign by way of demurrer to a complaint, and, if objections are overruled, an answer must be filed and trial had in a summary manner. State v. Richardson, (N. D. 1906) 109 N. W. 1026. Objections to an information for the removal of an officer under Ida. Rev. St. (1887) § 7459, are sufficient if the grounds are intelligibly presented in writing whether in the form of a demurrer or motion to dismiss. Rankin v. Jauman, 4 Ida. 53, 36 Pac. 502.

Delay.— It has been held under Cal. Pen. Code, § 772, providing for the removal of public officers, and declaring that on the filing of the petition the court must cite the party charged to appear at a time not more than ten nor less than five days from the time the accusation is presented, and on that day, or a subsequent day not more than twenty days after the accused was to appear, must proceed to hear the accusation in a summary manner; that the limitation of time within which the proceedings should be heard was merely intended to guarantee to accused a speedy hearing, and hence, where he appeared on the day set for trial and proceeded to trial without objection on account of delay, he could not thereafter object that the court lost jurisdiction to try the cause may remove one for an offense which is punishable criminally, even where such person has not been convicted on an indictment for such offense, and constitutional provisions that one shall not be answerable for a criminal offense except on indictment do not apply.[13] Inasmuch, however, as the court is authorized in most cases to remove for specified causes only, an attempted removal for a cause not specified is improper.[14] Such proceedings to remove are not commonly regarded as judicial in character. Thus an appeal will not, in the absence of statutory provision, lie from the determination to remove,[15] and the dismissal by the court of an application to remove is no bar to its renewal when the grounds of such dismissal are shown to be unfounded.[16] The reversal of a judgment removing an officer from an office removes the only impediment to his office, and he is in law the only lawful holder of the same, and an order of court is not necessary to restore him thereto.[17]

e. Removal by Executive and Administrative Officers. The powers of removal of the executive authorities are defined by the statutes upon which they depend,[18] except that the power of removal is by the common law regarded as incident to the power of appointment.[19] The executive power of removal is either an arbitrary or a conditional one. In case the power is an arbitrary one — and it is arbitrary when incident to the power of appointment — no formalities such as the presentment of charges or the granting of a hearing to the person removed are necessary to its lawful exercise.[20] The appointment of a successor even is by reason of delay. Folsom v. Conklin, 3 Cal. App. 480, 86 Pac. 724.

(1874) Bill of Rights, § 8, providing that "no person shall be held to answer a criminal charge, unless on the presentment or indictment of a grand jury," and art. 7, § 27, providing that "the circuit court shall have jurisdiction, upon information, presentment, or indictment, to remove any county or township officer from office, for incompetency . . . criminal conduct, malfeasance, misfeasance, or nonfeasance in office," the circuit court had no jurisdiction to remove a sheriff from office on information by the prosecuting attorney simply, for voluntarily allowing a prisoner in his custody to escape, as that is a criminal charge. Contra, Com. v. Jones, 10 Bush (Ky.) 725.

regarded as a removal of the prior incumbent.[21] It is not necessary that the cause assigned for removal should be stated in the precise language of the statute.[22] The investigation by a board, under statutory authority, of charges against an appointee will not be enjoined by reason of the fact that separate committees of each house of the legislature have investigated the charges and reported in favor of the incumbent, since such reports are not conclusive upon the board.[23] that the removal may be legal, such a hearing is not governed by rules applicable to strictly judicial proceedings.[26] Where the power of removal is limited to cause, the causes are sometimes specified in the law. If this is the case the removing authority may not remove for any cause not so specified.[27] Nor, where the causes are specified in the constitution, may the legislature add to these causes.[28] But such constitutional provisions are liberally construed in favor of the legislature's power,[29] and where the constitution is silent as to the causes for removal such causes may be fixed by the legislature.[30] If the cause specified in the law is "official misconduct," misconduct sufficient to justify a removal must be misconduct in the conduct of the office and not mere personal misbehavior.[31] Sometimes the law does not specify causes for removal but merely provides for removal for cause or for wilful maladministration. The determination of what is cause under such a provision may be reviewed by the courts.[32] Where removal may be made for cause only, the cause must have occurred during the present term of the officer. Misconduct prior to the present term even during a preceding term will not justify a removal.[33] Limitations upon the power of removal are often contained in civil service rules and laws.[34] Such laws may not amend or modify any provision of the constitution.[35] The usual limitations provided by such rules and laws are so formulated as to prevent the removal of all officers appointed under them or of honorably discharged soldiers and sailors, without a hearing. They are, however, so conflict as to whether intoxication is sufficient ground for removal from office. The following states hold it to be sufficient, particularly if it occurs in office hours: State v. Savage, 89 Ala. 1, 7 So. 7, 183, 7 L. R. Trial by commission.— The fact that a civil service commission, after an investigation of an accused official, furnished him with the testimony taken and gave him an opportunity to present his defense, was not an assumption of the right to try such person for any offense, but simply gave him an opportunity, if he elected to do so, to rebut any reflections upon him. People v. Milliken, 185 N. Y. 35, 77 N. E. 872 [affirming 110 N. Y. App. Div. 579, 97 N. Y. Criminal responsibility for removal.— Under Laws (1892), c. 577, prohibiting the removal of a veteran from public office except for cause shown after a hearing, but imposing no penalty, and Pen. strued by the courts as not to prevent summary removals for reasons of economy,[36] provided the action of the removing officer is taken in good faith;[37] nor do they affect probationary appointments,[38] persons improperly appointed,[39] or not appointed as a result of a competitive examination,[40] or hold-overs who have not passed the civil service examinations.[41] Inasmuch as such laws have been passed to confer a privilege on specific classes of persons, any one protected by them may waive the rights which he has under them by accepting an appointment for a specified time.[42] The exact degree to which such provisions as have been mentioned limit the power of removal is dependent upon the attitude of the courts. The principle of the unlimited power of removal has been for so long a time made the basis of the national administrative system of the United States that the federal courts are not inclined to regard statutes providing a power of removal for cause as imposing a limitation of any great force on the otherwise unlimited power of removal possessed by the president, and hold that a provision of this character makes it necessary for the president to accord to the officer removed Laws (1896), p. 753, c. 821, § 1 (Civil Service Laws, Laws (1899), p. 809, c. 370, § 21), making it a misdemeanor to reduce the compensation of an honorably discharged Union soldier holding a position by appointment or employment in the state to bring about his resignation, and giving him a right of action therefor for damages and also a remedy by mandamus, an action for damages cannot be maintained without first resorting to the remedy by mandamus. a hearing only when the removal purports to be for cause and does not authorize the court to review the action of the president.[43] Where the power of removal is arbitrary the rule is the same as to the power of the courts to review the action of the removing officer.[44] In some cases the law, while not limiting the removing power to specified causes, provides that the power may be exercised only after charges have been preferred against the offending officer and an opportunity has been accorded to him to defend himself. Under these conditions it is held that the law has been complied with if an opportunity is given to the officer to defend himself against charges which if true would justify removal, and the courts have no right to review the determination ordering the removal.[45] Sometimes the same view is taken as to the power of the courts where the removal may be made for cause.[46] This rule is particularly applicable where the power to remove is for cause satisfactory to the removing authority.[47] In determining whether the formalities required by law have been complied with, the courts do not require the same strictness of procedure on the part of the removing officer as is required in an ordinary judicial proceeding.[48]

5. IMPEACHMENT. The method of removal by impeachment means historically removal by the legislature after proceedings in the nature of judicial proceedings. At the present time, however, the word is used in the statutes of a number of the states to mean as well the removal of officers by special judicial proceedings, had, not before the legislature, but before some court to which jurisdiction has been given by statute.[49] The method of impeachment which will now be considered is the proceeding before the legislature to which reference has been made.[50] As the power to remove by impeachment is given expressly by the constitution, it may be exercised with regard to officers whose tenure is fixed by the constitution, and

In New York, however, because the power of removal for cause is regarded as a judicial power, and a determination made in its exercise is therefore reviewable on certiorari (People v. Nichols, 79 N. Y. 582), and because under section 2140 of the code of civil procedure, the courts may on certiorari quash a determination if it is contrary to the evidence, at the present time the courts may review as to the facts the determinations to remove from office made by officers having power to remove for cause and after a hearing (People v. French, 119 N. who on that account may not be disturbed by the legislature except through the constitutional method of impeachment. The method of impeachment commonly provided is that the lower house of the legislature draws up articles of impeachment and presents them to the upper house, the senate, which sometimes with the judges of the highest court, or acting under the presidency of the chief justice,[51] may, generally only with a greater than ordinary majority,[52] convict the person impeached. The causes for impeachment are generally crimes and misdemeanors,[53] and the punishment which may be inflicted is expulsion from office and ineligibility to office in the future, but a person so convicted may be tried afterward by the ordinary criminal courts.[54] As impeachment proceedings are provided for in the constitution, it has been unnecessary to decide the question whether, in the absence of a constitutional provision of this sort, the legislature itself possesses the power to provide such a method of removal of officers, whose terms are fixed by the constitution. It has, however, been held that if the constitution provides a method for impeachment of officers, that method is exclusive and the power which the legislature might otherwise be regarded as possessing is taken away.[55] Impeachment proceedings are regarded by the courts as criminal proceedings and, if provided for in the constitution, are to be governed by any constitutional provisions which regulate criminal proceedings.[56] The constitution commonly confines impeachment proceedings to officers of the state. Where such a limitation exists, neither local officers[57] nor members of the legislature are regarded as liable to impeachment.[58] The senate as a court of impeachment is a court of limited jurisdiction. At the same time the ordinary judicial courts show, whenever an attempt has been made to obtain from them a review of its action in impeachment matters, a great disinclination to exercise any such power.[59] At the same time the courts will interfere in a proper proceeding as by habeas corpus to relieve from imprisonment decreed because of the failure of a witness to testify where the legislature has clearly exceeded its jurisdiction.[60]

51. Such is the case when the president of the United States is impeached. U. S. Const. art. 1, § 3, par. 6. Sometimes it is the supreme court of the state which has jurisdiction. See State v. Hastings, 37 Nebr. 96, 55 N. W. 774.

"Crimes and misdemeanors" are said, in State v. Hastings, 37 Nebr. 96, 116, 55 N. W. 774, to exist "where the act of official delinquency consists in the violation of some provision of the constitution or statute which is denounced as a crime or misdemeanor, or where it is a mere neglect of duty willfully done, with a corrupt intention, or where the negligence is so gross and the disregard of duty so flagrant as to warrant the inference that it was willful and corrupt." Mere negligence or mere excess of power with corrupt intention is not a "crime or misdemeanor" for which the officer should be impeached.

State v. Buckley, 54 Ala. 599. See also State v. Hastings, 37 Nebr. 96, 55 N. W. 774, holding that impeachment is a criminal action and that therefore the charges must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

In the case of legislative officers the legislature has itself such complete powers of expulsion (Hiss v. Bartlett, 3 Gray (Mass.) 468, 63 Am. III. TITLE TO AND POSSESSION OF OFFICE.

A. Nature of Right to Office. It has been shown that an office is not property.[61] At the same time the right to office is a substantial right recognized by law, and may be enforced by the proper remedy if the one possessing the right is wrongfully deprived of the office. Conflicting claims to office are to be decided in the manner provided by law,[62] and the law which the courts are to apply in determining the right is that existing at the time the action is brought to enforce it.[63] The best evidence of a right to the office is the commission or certificate of election for the issue of which the law usually makes provision.[64] One to whom such certificate or commission has been issued is regarded as prima facie entitled to the office.[65] The commission, however, is merely evidence. Its possession by the would-be incumbent is not a necessary qualification for office, and the term of office, where the issue of the commission is a necessary prerequisite to the appointment, dates from the time of its issue and not from the time of its receipt by the incumbent.[66] Furthermore, under many statutes the title to office is based in final resort, not on the commission, but on the fact that the one claiming the office has been chosen by the appointing officer,[67] or has been elected by the people in case the office is an elective one.[68] A certificate of election is, like a commission, only evidence of title, which in last analysis is based on the fact that the person claiming the office has received the largest number of votes cast at the election.[69] ment can be had on articles of impeachment, since under the constitution the only punishment to be inflicted in case of conviction was removal from office.

mining the title to office and for securing possession of it is an information in the nature of a quo warranto,[75] or its statutory substitute. But inasmuch as its statutory substitute is in many cases unsatisfactory, because of the fact that the tribunal which has jurisdiction is apt to be governed by political rather than legal considerations, as in the case of elections to the legislature[76] or city council,[77] where the legislature or city council is by law to judge of the qualifications of its members, it is necessary to provide some means by which a claimant, without finally determining his title to office, may secure from a proper authority his certificate of election, which will give him, as has been pointed out, a prima facie title to the office. This certificate a claimant for office is ordinarily entitled to obtain by the writ of mandamus.[78] Furthermore where one is illegally excluded from an office to which he is entitled, the mandamus is regarded as the proper remedy by which to secure the possession of such office.[79] The technical character of the common-law remedies for securing the possession of an office has brought it about that special remedies have been provided by statute in the nature of an ordinary action by means of which either one entitled to the office may enforce his rights, or one wrongfully occupying an office may be ousted therefrom, and in some cases punished for his wrongful action, and by either of which the title to the office may be determined.[80] The action provided by statute for trying title to office is ordinarily regarded as exclusive.[81] Title to a public office cannot be tried

Trial of title.— Mandamus may not be made use of to try the title to office. To make use of it the relator must show that his title is clear and that he is being wrongfully excluded. Thus, where one has been removed from office without being accorded a hearing, where by law a removal is improper without such a hearing, mandamus is the proper remedy to secure reinstatement. People v. Scannell, 172 N. Y. 316, 65 N. E. 165; People v. Scannell, 158 N. Y. 686, 53 N. E. 1129 [reversing 36 N. Y. App. Div. 629, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 1112]; People v. Keller, 158 N. But see People v. Brady, 166 N. Y. 44, 59 N. E. 701. By the common law the certiorari may be used only to review determinations made in excess of the jurisdiction of the authority making them or irregularly made or in the making of which there has been a mistake of law. See CERTIORARI. In New York, however, section 2140 of the code of civil procedure has been so interpreted by the courts as to permit a determination of removal to be quashed where such determination is not supported by a preponderance of evidence. Inasmuch, however, as the New York law confines the use of the writ of certiorari to the review of judicial acts, a determination of removal made after a hearing where the removal is not for cause only, not being considered a judicial act, is not reviewable on certiorari. by motion,[82] or by a feigned issue or amicable action between individuals,[83] or in an action for salary brought by one who is not the incumbent of the office,[84] nor in an action by the incumbent for his salary.[85]

2. ACTION TO TRY TITLE TO OR FOR RECOVERY OF OFFICE. The actions by which one entitled to an office may enforce his rights are of two kinds. The first is usually spoken of as an action to try title to or for recovery of office.[86] The actions thus provided are regarded as in the nature of ordinary actions and as not calling for the extraordinary remedial powers of the supreme court of the state,[87] and a contesting candidate may resort to them where the competent authority refuses to canvass a vote, without first proceeding against such an authority by mandamus.[88] The action is begun by an ordinary complaint,[89] and when permitted against any person unlawfully holding any public office in the state may be used to test the title to a municipal office.[90] These actions may be brought by private parties either with the consent of the attorney-general,[91] or without such consent, in case of his refusal after application duly made.[92] But a private party entitled to bring such an action who voluntarily turns his office over to defendant cannot bring the action.[93] When these actions are brought by a private party such party must show prima facie title in himself, and his complaint or petition must contain allegations setting forth facts necessary to show such prima facie title.[94] Where defendant in an action to determine the title to an office alleges fraud in

Names of persons casting illegal votes.— In an action to try title to an office on the ground of illegal votes, it is sufficient if the complaint state the number of votes thus cast without giving the names of the persons casting them. State v. Hilmantel, 21 Wis. 566.

Sufficiency of complaint.— In a complaint showing that defendant was not eligible to enter into the office to which he was elected, and that he claims the office, a prima facie

the election and prays for affirmative relief in his answer, he must aver that he is qualified to hold the office.[95] As between the incumbent of an office and one trying to oust him, the burden of proof is on the latter.[96] A judgment, if in favor of plaintiff, may order the respondent immediately to vacate the office,[97] and is ordinarily appealable on motion of one asserting claim to the office.[98]

3. Action For Recovery of Books and Papers. The second kind of action for obtaining possession of an office is often entitled an action for the recovery of books and papers. This action differs from the action just considered in that its object is to obtain temporary possession of the office rather than finally to determine the title to the office.[99] The action resembles therefore the common-law mandamus.[1] But plaintiff in such an action must show prima facie title, since he must prevail on his own title and not on the fact that the incumbent has no color of title to the office, and if he does show such prima facie title he is entitled to an order.[2] While the court will not try the title to the office in these pro-

Admissibility of evidence.— In an action for usurpation of office a petition of numerous persons for the appointment of defendant, stating the relator to have ceased to be an inhabitant of the state, is inadmissible in evidence. People v. Brite, 55 Cal. 79. Where the legislature in contravention of the constitution takes from the executive the power of appointment to an office, and itself elects an incumbent and certifies the election to the governor, the records in the executive office are competent evidence in a contest between such appointee and a subsequent appointee of the governor to show that the former was appointed only on account of his election by the legislature. Under the New York statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 2741*a*, which substantially reënacts 1 Rev. St. 125, §§ 50–54, it is provided that if any person shall neglect or refuse to deliver over to his successor any books or papers, such successor may make complaint thereof

ceedings, if the claim of plaintiff is void beyond substantial doubt the court will decide that fact.[3] This proceeding being based on the statute is governed strictly by the provisions of the statute,[4] and an order of the court in such a proceeding is defective if it does not state definitely what books shall be given up,[5] or where, if the person to whom it is directed denies he has possession of the books in question, such order is issued before evidence has been taken upon such issues of fact.[6] The statute providing such action may make the judge the sole trier of the facts without violating a constitutional guaranty that the trial by jury shall remain inviolate.[7] An appeal from the judgment of the court does not prevent the successful party from proceeding to compel the delivery to him of the books and papers.[8]

4. Action For Usurpation of Office. Finally, it is sometimes provided by statute that an action for usurpation may be brought against the usurper.[9] These actions may be brought only where permitted by the statute providing them.[10] Actions of this sort are sometimes ordinary civil actions.[11] But in the case of civil actions, the court is often authorized, where it renders judgment of ouster, to impose a fine upon the usurper.[12] It is also often provided that usurpation of office may be punished by indictment as a crime. The effect of one's bona fides in exculpating him from criminal motive depends upon the wording of the

to any justice of the supreme court and an order may be granted committing the person withholding the books and papers to jail until delivery is made. See Matter of Smith, 116 N. Y. App. Div. 665, 101 N. Y. Suppl. 992 [affirming 49 Misc. 567, 100 N. Y. Suppl. 179]; People v. Allen, 42 Barb. 203. Under this statute the justice may examine the question of title so far as to enable him to determine properly the question to be submitted, but if the right of the applicant is not free from any reasonable doubt the summary relief should be denied. In case the title of the applicant to office is free from reasonable doubt he is absolutely entitled to the assistance which the statute contemplates. Necessity of criminality.— In New York such a fine may be imposed only where the usurper has been guilty of some act in taking or holding the office which is criminal or at least grossly improper. statute.[13] Who are the proper parties to the suit as plaintiffs is determined by the statute giving the action. The statute commonly provides that the attorney-general,[14] or his local representative,[15] may bring the action either on his own motion or on the relation of some private person interested.[16] Such actions, when permitted, may be brought against one holding over after the expiration of his term of office, who as against the one entitled to the office is regarded as an intruder.[17] In these actions to oust an intruder from office it is sufficient to allege that defendant intruded into the office,[18] or to state facts sufficient to show a forfeiture of the office.[19] Where the actions are brought at the instance of private

Code Pr. § 483, authorizing the commonwealth or a person entitled to an office to prevent usurpation by an action, section 484, requiring the commonwealth's attorney to bring the action against a usurper of a county office, if no other person be entitled thereto, etc., and section 487, providing that on the removal of a usurper the person adjudged entitled thereto shall be placed in possession, if the action be instituted by him — one in possession of an office, although a usurper, may not be removed at the suit of another claimant, unless such claimant shows himself entitled to the office.

In Louisiana under Rev. St. § 2593 et seq., the proper party plaintiff in the action provided for usurpation of office is the party claiming the office as entitled de jure, and the necessary defendant is the officer de facto who holds and possesses it and who is claimed to be a usurper and intruder. Guillotte v. Poincy, 41 La. Ann. 333, 6 So. 507, 5 L. R. A. 403.

Amendment adding party.— Where, under the statute, it is provided that upon a complaint in the name of the people upon the relation of an individual to test the right to an office the name of the relator must be joined with the people as plaintiff, an omission to join the relator as a party may be cured by amendent without cost. Stine v. Berry, 96 Ky. 63, 27 S. W. 809, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 279.

Election of relator.— In an action in the name of the people against a person for intruding into an office, the time of the election at which the claimant claims to have been elected to the office should be stated in the complaint. People v. Ryder, 12 N. Y. 433 [reversing 16 Barb. 370], holding a complaint sufficient.

Estoppel by allegations.— The complaint in this action alleged that defendant had been elected to the office of town-clerk of the town of Hillsdale, and that he had entered upon the discharge of the duties of his office, but that he was not eligible to the office because he had not been an inhabitant of the town for the next year preceding the election; that by reason of his ineligibility a vacancy in the office of town-clerk existed, to fill which the relator had been lawfully elected. It was held that, although the people need not have alleged defendant's election and his inability to hold the office, but might have simply alleged that he had intruded into the office unlawfully, and have called upon him to show by what authority he claimed to hold it, yet, as these allegations were in fact made, defendant by not denying them admitted them to be true and thereby estab-

individuals claiming they have been unlawfully kept out of offices the measure of damages is the compensation received by the person who wrongfully occupied the office.[20] The successful party is not entitled to recover sums expended in the employment of counsel either from a public corporation, from one of whose offices he was removed,[21] or from the officer who removed him.[22] The effect of a judgment of ouster under some statutes is to vest the title to the office eo instante in the claimant.[23] The right to an appeal is governed by the statutes under which the proceedings are brought.[24]

D. Possession of Office Pending Contest. Where there are two claimants to an office, the one who has prima facie title to it has the right to the possession of it pending the contest. This rule is applied both where the one having prima facie title is the incumbent,[25] and where he is merely a claimant to the office.[26]

IV. RIGHTS, POWERS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES.

A. Compensation and Fees[27] — 1. Right to Compensation — a. In General. An office, as has been shown, is not a contract.[28] The rules of law relative to contracts do not therefore apply to the official relation.[29] But the powers, duties, rights, and liabilities of officers are to be governed by that branch of the law spoken of as the law of officers. One of the rights which, by that law, is commonly accorded to officers is the right to compensation, fees, or emoluments, where provision is made by law for such compensation.[30] It follows from this rule that there must have been a promise to pay,[42] except in those cases in which the law implies a promise to pay.[43]

d. Interest Upon Public Funds. In the absence of a statute giving them the right, officers have no claim to interest on public funds in their hands,[44] except in certain states where it is held that the officer occupies under the law the relation of debtor to the state. Under such conditions he has a claim to the interest on public funds in his hands.[45] This matter is usually decided against the officer's claim by statute.[46]

e. Excessive or Illegal Compensation and Recovery Back. If an officer receives more than his legal compensation, he is liable to an action for the recovery of the excess.[47] But money paid by the government or by a municipal corporation for compensation in excess of that provided by law, when the payment was made as a result of a mistake of law, is regarded as a voluntary payment and may not be recovered.[48] In some cases the exaction of higher fees than are permitted by law is punishable criminally, or is subject to a statutory penalty.[49] Indeed, by the common law, the corrupt taking of illegal fees is regarded as extortion.[50]

f. Pensions. Sometimes the compensation of officers includes the right to a pension. Where this is the case the claim to such pension is not a vested right.[51] The appropriation of public funds to provide pensions for those already in the service of the government is perfectly proper, even under a constitutional provision forbidding the grant of money to individuals.[52] Deductions from the pay of officers to provide pensions may not be made except when authorized by the legislature,[53] which itself may not provide for such deductions where the constitution requires uniformity of taxation, since such deductions are regarded as imposing a tax on a class in the community.[54]

2. Amount of Compensation. The amount of compensation is, in the absence of other provision, to be fixed by the legislature,[55] which may, however, delegate its power,[56] and which of course must observe all constitutional limitations.[57] A common limitation is that the compensation of officers must be fixed by general law.[58] Where the provision of law fixing the compensation is not clear, it should be given the construction most favorable to the government.[59] The amount of the compensation, as fixed by the law, may not be changed by agreement. Contracts attempted to be made either with a local corporation or an individual which provide for a compensation different from that provided by law are void as against public policy.[60] Where one office is created, the duties of which are to be per-

3. Change of Compensation — a. In General. In the absence of constitutional inhibition the compensation of officers may be changed even during their term of office,[62] but after the official services have been rendered a contract to pay for them at the legal rate exists which cannot be impaired even by the legislature.[63] The intention to change the compensation must, however, be clear.[64] A mere appropriation for payment of salary is not generally regarded as changing the salary.[65]

b. Constitutional Restrictions. But where the compensation is fixed by the constitution, or where there is a constitutional provision prohibiting such change during the term of an incumbent, no change of salary during such term is permissible, and, where a similar provision is contained in a statute, the powers of municipal corporations are subject to the same limitation.[66] But such a provision does not prevent the passage of a statute abolishing the office or shortening the term.[67] Such a limitation may not be avoided by the resignation of an incumbent and his reappointment at an increased salary.[68] If contained in a constitution such a limitation is sometimes construed so as to affect only offices provided for in the constitution,[69] or payable out of the public treasury of the state.[70] The exact meaning of such a limitation depends on the words used. Thus if the prohibition is as to "salary" it does not affect one whose compensation is not definite and fixed but is uncertain in amount or consists in fees or percentages.[71] Where, however, the term "emoluments" or "compensation" is used the limitation is wider in its effect, embracing all kinds of compensation, such as fees, per diem allowances and allowances to a sheriff for board of prisoners.[72] Limitations which provisions prevent a change of the compensation during the term, even though the compensation is dependent in amount on something independent of the action of any authority, as for example, the amount of the assessed property in the district. Dyer v. U. S., supra.

Change before qualification of officer.— Where the provision prohibits the change of compensation after the election or appointment of an officer, a change made after an officer was elected but before the beginning of the term is improper. The term "emoluments" means the profit "which is annexed to the possession of office, as salary, fees, and perquisites" (Bruce v. Dickey, 116 Ill. 527, 535, 6 N. E. 435), pecuniary in character (Reals v. Smith, 8 Wyo. 159, 168, 56 Pac. 690), and embraces "all other proper receipts of the office not included within the term 'fees' or 'commissions'" (Arapahoe County v. Hall, 9 Colo. It includes "fees" or "compensation," as used in a statute which renders it a misdemeanor for an officer to receive any emoluments not provided by law for doing an official act. The words "compensation, perquisite, or benefit" mean, however, an official "compensation," etc., and do not include payment for non-official services. Bruce v. Dickey, supra. by their terms prevent a change of compensation during the term of office of an incumbent do not affect officers who have no fixed term,[73] nor persons not officers,[74] but do affect hold-overs,[75] or one appointed to fill a vacancy.[76] Such limitations do not affect provision for expenses,[77] except that use may not be made of a power to increase an allowance for expenses so as to increase the compensation received by an officer;[78] nor do they prevent the legislature or its delegate from providing that a change in the duties of the incumbent of an office shall be accompanied by a change of his compensation,[79] or from granting him clerical aid or an allowance for clerk hire,[80] or from abolishing an office or consolidating it with another, or dividing the duties of one office and distributing them among several offices.[81] Finally a constitutional provision preventing a change of compensation during an official term does not change the rule of law that the de jure officer must sue the de facto officer in order to recover salary paid such de facto officer but by law payable to the de jure officer.[82] If an officer accepts an office, whose compensation it has been attempted illegally to reduce, and receives the compensation at a reduced rate, he is not estopped from claiming the balance as fixed by law.[83]

4. Payment and Collection. If the compensation is in the form of a salary its payment may be enforced by suit where the officer is to be paid by a public corporation, since the right to payment for services rendered is regarded as in the nature of a contract right. The same rule is applied where the officer is to be paid by the United States or a state government, if such government has provided a forum in which suits on contract may be brought against it. In the United States government such suits may be bronght in the court of claims, or if they involve no more than one thousand dollars and ten thousand dollars in the district and circuit courts respectively acting as courts of claims.[84] In the states sometimes similar bodies have been provided.[85] Sometimes the ordinary courts have jurisdiction under a special provision of statute.[86] In case no such provision is made, the ordinary remedy by means of which the payment of accrued salary may be enforced is the writ of mandamus.[87] The action to enforce the right to compensation may be bronght only by an officer who has qualified as required by law,[88] and one even wrongfully removed from office cannot bring an action to enforce the payment of his salary until he shall have established his right to the office.[89] In actions for compensation the pleadings should set forth clearly all facts necessary to establish the claim, and a petition or complaint which does not do so is demurrable for evasiveness and uncertainty.[90] If the compensation is fixed by permanent statute and the time of payment is prescribed by law, no special annual appropriation is necessary to justify an issue of a warrant for its payment.[91] But where the law prescribes that the controller shall not draw his warrant for the payment of the salary of any person until the civil service commissioners shall have certified that such person has been appointed in pursuance of law, no payment may be made except upon such certification.[92] A claim for salary carries interest from the time a demand is made on the auditor for the proper warrant for the amount thereof.[93] Injunction will not be issued to restrain the payment of the salary to the incumbent at the instance of one who claims the office pending the trial of the contest as to the right to the office.[94] Nor will a receiver of the fees be appointed.[95] In case the compensation consists of fees, such fees are payable by the person to whom the service is rendered at the time the service is rendered unless some other provision is made by statute,[96] and officers are protected in refusing to deliver official papers, such as exemplifications, until their fees have been paid.[97]

B. Powers and Duties[3] — 1. In General. The authority and powers of officers are determined by the law. In most cases this law is to be found in statutes passed by the legislature and ordinances adopted by municipal corporations, since the legislature has the right under the constitution, either directly or indirectly, as a result of a delegation of its power to a municipal corporation, to regulate the duties and powers of public officers.[4] Furthermore, there are a few officers whose position and powers have been worked out through the decisions of the courts. Such officers are known as common-law officers. The most noted examples of them are the constable,[5] the coroner, and the sheriff.[6] Where mention is made of such officers in the constitution it has been held that they thus acquire a constitutional right, of which the legislature may not deprive them, to the exercise of the powers which have immemorially been attached to the offices,[7] although the legislature is not prevented from conferring upon them and taking from them new powers which have not been traditionally associated with the office.[8] The authority and powers of officers are determined by the law, considered as a whole, and a mistaken conception on the part of an officer as to the statute under which he has acted will not affect the validity of his action, provided he actually had legal authority.[9] But acts which are within the apparent but in excess of the actual authority of officers will not bind the government which they represent,[10]

unless ratified by it.[11] Officers are, however, presumed to have acted within their authority,[12] and all persons dealing with officers are presumed to know what is the extent of the powers of such officers.[13] Finally officers need not, in the absence of a provision of law to that effect, devote all their time to the performance of their official duties but may engage in other occupations.[14]

2. Mandatory and Permissive or Directory Statutes. Statutes imposing duties and conferring powers on officers are either mandatory or directory. Permissive words in a statute are construed as mandatory where the exercise of the power granted is necessary to protect the public interest or the rights of third persons.[15] But statutes, unless clearly mandatory, are regarded as directory, where the purpose of their passage is merely to secure regularity in official procedure.[16] Particularly are statutes construed as directory in character which provide that official acts shall be done within a given time.[17] Whereas the failure of an officer to observe a mandatory provision will result in the invalidity of all action taken subsequent to such failure,[18] and such failure may in a proper case be overcome by mandamus,[19] the failure to obey a directory provision will not result in the invalidity of his subsequent action.[20] powers of officers are classified as discretionary or ministerial. Over the former the courts have no control except where the discretion has been abused. Thus, if the power has by law been given to an officer to determine a question of fact, his determination is final, in the absence of any controlling provisions of statute,[21] provided he has not been guilty of an abuse of discretion.[22] Such a determination is ordinarily not open to collateral attack in a court,[23] and is binding upon the successors in office of the officer who made it.[24] But the exercise of ministerial powers is subject to the control of the courts, which may enforce their exercise through the issue of a mandamus,[25] may restrain their improper exercise in a proper case, through the issue of an injunction,[26] and may review it in a collateral proceeding, as for example, where an action for damages is brought against an officer for negligence in the performance of a ministerial duty.[27] Discretionary or judicial powers, finally, may not in the absence of statutory authority be delegated;[28] but ministerial duties, except where there is a statutory prohibition, may be delegated.[29] majority regarded as valid where all are not present or have not been notified.[38] The majority rule is always the rule as to the actions of the legislative body of a public corporation where the number of such body is defined in the law. Where the members of the body have been duly notified of the meeting, a majority of the members of such body may take valid action at any such meeting.[39] This rule as to the validity of the action of a majority is not, however, applied where the evident purpose of the legislature was that the act must be the act of all. Thus, where power is conferred upon three commissioners and provision is made for filling vacancies whenever the number is reduced below three, two commissioners may not act while the office of the third is vacant.[40] In a number of instances the rule to be applied in the case of a joint authority is contained in a statute. In such a case, while the exact meaning of the rule is to be obtained from a consideration of the wording of the statute,[41] at the same time the courts are influenced by the common law in their construction of such statutes.[42]

5. Disqualification For Interest.[43] It is a rule of the common law that judicial and discretionary officers are disqualified to act in a matter in which they are personally interested. This principle is often incorporated into the statutes.[44] An exception to the general rule is made to the effect "that where a judicial officer has not so direct an interest in the cause or matter as that the result must necessarily affect him to his personal or pecuniary loss or gain, or where his personal or pecuniary interest is minute, and he has so exclusive jurisdiction of the cause or matter by constitution or by statute as that his refusal to act will prevent any proceeding in it, then he may act so far as that there may not be a failure of remedy, or, as it is sometimes expressed, a failure of justice."[45] The interest which will disqualify is not therefore merely such interest as the ordinary inhabitant of a district has in the settlement of a question affecting the welfare of such a district, but must be such an interest as peculiarly affects the officer personally.[46] It is, however, held that such personal interest peculiar to himself is found, not merely where an officer is peculiarly interested in the action to be taken, but as well where, if a judge, he is related by blood to one of the parties to the suit before him,[47] and where he may be supposed to have a bias in favor of one of the parties as where he has acted as the counsel of one of the parties in the same cause.[48] The rule as to disqualification for interest is applied to make invalid contracts by a board or commission with one of its own members.[49] This rule as to disqualification is applied also so as to prevent an official, like a tax-collector or sheriff, from purchasing directly or indirectly property at a sale which he conducts.[50] The rule as to disqualification of officers for personal interest is not applied as rigorously in the case of ministerial officers.[51] Thus, while a judge may not, as has been seen, act in a case in which he has been counsel, he may execute an order in the case which has been directed to him by a higher court.[52] There is no general rule as to the validity of the action taken by one who is disqualified in any of the ways just mentioned, although it would seem that judicial or quasi-judicial action of one so disqualified is void and may be treated so even in collateral proceeding.[53] Where, however, one has taken advantage of his official position to contract with himself it is at the option of the government or local corporation which he represents, to treat the contract as merely voidable, or to approve it by ratification.[54]

6. PRESUMPTION AS TO DISCHARGE OF DUTIES. It is a presumption of law, until the contrary appears, that officers have done their duty, but the jurisdiction of officers will not be presumed[55]

C. Accounting and Settlement — 1. IN GENERAL. Every officer, even if irregularly elected or appointed, who has charge of public moneys, assumes a liability in respect of such moneys to the government which he serves.[56] This liability extends only to money or its equivalent which he has actually received,[57] and exists irrespective of any bond he may give. The bond given is regarded not as the basis of the liability but as a security for the government.[58] The obligations imposed by law upon an officer may not be waived by his superiors,[59] although the liability which officers and particularly their sureties assume on taking office may be modified by the conditions of the bond. The character of this liability is not as yet settled with absolute uniformity by the courts. Some cases consider it as of the nature of that of an ordinary bailee for hire with the result that an officer not guilty of negligence is not liable for money where it has been stolen,[60] or where the bank, in which it is deposited, fails.[61] Other cases, often because of

Failure of government to provide safe place of deposit.— In all these cases the fact that the government did not provide a safe place to deposit public funds had no influence upon the decisions, nor had the fact that it did make such provision and that the money was deposited in the safe place provided, if such place was in the control of the officer. Quite a number of cases do not regard an officer who has acted without negligence as liable for the failure of a bank in which he has deposited money belonging to private individuals (Gartley v. People, 28 Colo. 227, 64 Pac. 208; Wilson v. People, 19 Colo. 199, 34 Pac. 944, 41 Am. occurred the officer had the funds in his hands owing to a violation of the law.[63] Indeed any violation of law, as the deposit of public funds in the officer's personal account, will make the officer liable.[64] But if the law has designated banks as depositories for public moneys, the deposit by an officer of public moneys in such a depository relieves him from all liability.[65] If the liability is recognized, a claim against an officer is treated like a private claim, in that interest runs on it from the time the claim accrues.[66] The fixing of the amount of the claim by the proper accounting officers is prima facie sufficient to warrant a recovery against both the officer and a surety;[67] and, where the statute provides that the accounts of public officers shall be settled by a board of auditors, their settlement unappealed from is conclusive both as to principal and sureties on an official bond and may not be collaterally attacked in an action on said bond.[68] The same rule is not, however, applied to mere settlements of official accounts made by officers and the public corporations which they serve. Such settlements do not prevent subsequent suits, on discovery of the facts within the period of the statute of limitations for public moneys wrongfully retained by such officers, nor do they estop officers from proving in subsequent suits to which they are parties what actually occurred.[69] In the settlement of official accounts the receipt by the officer of checks or other evidences of debt is treated as the receipt of money for which the officer is liable,[70] except that sureties may show in an action against them that certificates of deposit issued to their principal by insolvent banks and treated as cash by a board in settling their principal's account were of no value.[71] In many cases special statutes of limitation have been passed, fixing the time within which an action may be brought to enforce the liability of an officer for public funds. Where such statutes are provided, the usual rule is to the effect that they begin to run from the time when the officer committed the act in violation of law upon which his liability is based. Such act is regarded as having taken place in case the officer fails to do a thing which the law says he shall do, as, for example, when he fails to pay over money at the time named by the law. No special demand on him to do his duty is necessary.[72] Statutes may provide for the summary collection of claims for public funds from delinquent officers by the issuance of a warrant of distress directing a levy on the property of such officers and a sale of their property; and a previous judicial determination of the amount of indebtedness is not necessary.[73] Such summary process may be provided also against the sureties.[74] Where no such proceedings are provided suit may be brought against a delinquent officer to force him to pay the money over to the proper person, usually his successor.[75] In such a suit defendant may not question the regularity of the proceedings by which the money came into his hands.[76] Sometimes the statute provides criminal punishment for the violation by officers having charge of public funds of the law providing for the safekeeping of such funds. Where this is the case the statute is construed strictly. Thus where the officer is criminally liable for the failure to pay over money on the demand of his successor, a demand at the house of the officer by one not authorized to receive the money is not sufficient, since such officer is only required to hold such funds ready for delivery when his successor presents himself ready to receive them.[77] The rule applicable to ordinary trustees that, where they have misappropriated the funds intrusted to them, such funds may be followed into the hands of third parties has no application to public officers, who give a bond to secure a full accounting of the moneys which may come into their management and control.[78]

2. Lien For Amount Settled. The settlement of an account against an officer even when made by an auditing authority creates no lien upon the officer's property in the absence of a statute to that effect.[79] But such a lien is sometimes created by statute and is sometimes by such a statute made to attach to the property both of the officer and of the sureties on his bond.[80] But in order that such a lien may attach all the formalities required by the statute, as, for example, that a certified copy of the account as settled be recorded, must be complied with.[81]

D. Liabilities[82] — 1. In General. The liability of officers is a three-fold char-

Kansas.—Cloud County v. Hostetler, 6 Kan. App. 286, 51 Pac. 62.

Kentucky.— Shropshire v. Pullen, 3 Bush 512, holding that the statute will not begin to run against an action to recover commissions retained by an officer on an unauthorized sale until the sale is set aside.

There is considerable conflict as to the time when the statute begins to run in particular instances of official delinquency, as, for example, the failure of a sheriff to turn over moneys coming from a sheriff's sale. In Connecticut and Massachusetts the cause of action for the recovery does not accrue and the statute consequently does not begin to run until the demand for payment has been made. Church v. Clark, 1 Root (Conn.) 303; Weston v. Ames, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 244. In Georgia, since no demand is necessary, the statute begins to run from the time the money was received (Thompson v. Central Bank, 9 Ga. 413), while in Alabama and Missouri the statute runs from the time the return of the sheriff is made (Governor v. Stonum, 11 Ala. 679; State v. Minor, 44 Mo. 373).

acter. A violation of duty may be punished by removal from office, even where the power to remove is limited to cause,[83] may be punished criminally,[84] and finally may result in a proper case in a civil liability to any person injured thereby. The extent of this civil liability of an officer to persons injured by his violation of official duty differs in accordance with the character of the office held by such officer as well as in accordance with the character of the power through the exercise of which the damage has been caused.

2. ACTS IN EXCESS OF JURISDICTION. An officer, not a judge of a higher court,[85] is, however, liable for every act in excess of jurisdiction. This is such a fundamental principle of the English law that there are few cases which directly discuss it. In the cases, which are legion, applying the principle, the courts devote almost all their attention to answering the question, has there been an excess of jurisdiction, and, in case the answer is in the affirmative, they, as a matter of course and without argument, hold the officer acting in excess of his jurisdiction liable.[86] The excess of jurisdiction which will cause the liability may result from the attempt to enforce a statute which is regarded by the courts as unconstitutional. The liability resulting from such an attempt is also treated by the courts as so axiomatic that the cases which hold officers liable under such conditions assume that the liability exists and are devoted almost exclusively to determining whether the statute in question is constitutional or not.[87] Officers are liable not merely to individuals but as well to the government for their acts in excess of jurisdiction.[88] The only exception to this rule, as to the liability of officers for acts done in excess of jurisdiction, is to be found in the case of purely ministerial officers who are protected in executing orders of superiors fair on their face, even though such orders were issued by such superiors in excess of their jurisdiction.[89]

By the greater weight of authority a ministerial officer is protected by his warrant, which he is in duty bound to execute, even if he knows that it has been irregularly or improperly issued.[90]

3. MINISTERIAL DUTIES. In the case of duties not owed solely to the public,[91] officers are liable for misfeasance, malfeasance, or nonfeasance in the performance of a ministerial duty where such misfeasance, malfeasance, or nonfeasance results in damage to an individual to whom a duty is owing.[92] What are ministerial duties is a question which it is difficult to answer. It has been held, however, that a duty is ministerial, so as to cause a claim for damages in case of its nonperformance or negligent performance, where its performance may be compelled by mandamus.[93] In some cases it is said that duties are ministerial where they are certain and specific and where there is no room for the exercise of judgment.[94] Furthermore it is held that an act does not cease to be ministerial "because the person performing it may have to satisfy himself that the state of facts exists under which it is his right and duty to perform the act."[95] The liability of officers for the performance of ministerial duties is not affected by the fact that in other capacities they may be acting judicially.[96] A public officer, who is a member of a corporate body upon which a duty rests, cannot be held liable for the neglect of duty of that body. If there be refusal to exercise the power of such body, it is the refusal of the body, and not of the individuals composing it.[97]

4. Discretionary Duties. While officers are liable for negligence in the performance of ministerial duties, no such liability is recognized in the case of discretionary or judicial duties. There are in general three classes of officers who are protected by this rule. In the first place are judicial officers, that is, officers holding regular courts for the decision of cases. These officers, when having jurisdiction, are never liable for errors or mistakes of judgment, even if actuated by corrupt or malicious motives. Here again most of the cases which apply the principle take its existence for granted, and are devoted to a determination of the question, whether the act complained of was within the jurisdiction of the officer

See also Crane v. Camp, 12 Conn. 464, where it is held that a justice of the peace acted ministerially in appointing freeholders to assess damages, although he had to inquire into the fitness of the persons whom he appointed. But see Grove v. Van Duyn, 44 N. J. L. 654, 43 Am. Rep. 412, in which the erroneous determination by a justice of the peace was held to be made in the exercise of a discretionary power and not to make him liable.

In the case of quasi-judicial or administrative officers the rule is with few exceptions that they decide jurisdictional questions at their peril. Thus, the determination by sanitary officers that a thing is a nuisance, preparatory to its abatement, is regarded as ministerial and not discretionary, and for such determination such officers are liable in a proper case. See Hutton v. Camden, 39 N. J. L. 122, 23 Am. Rep. 203; Underwood v. Greene, 42 N. Y. 140 [both cited with approval in People v. Yonkers Bd. of Health, 140 N. Y. 1, 35 N. E. 320, 37 Am. St. Rep. 522, 23 L. R. A. 481]. What is true of sanitary officers is also true of tax assessors who also decide as to their jurisdiction at their peril. Mygatt v. Washburn, 15 N. Y. 316. There is, however, a tendency in some of the decisions to regard the determination by quasi-judicial officers even of questions involving their jurisdiction as being discretionary in character, with the result that such officers are not liable for error in deciding as to their jurisdiction. See for example Raymond v. Fish, 51 Conn. 80, 50 Am. Rep. 3, where it was held that the members of a board of health were not liable for an erroneous determination that certain things were a nuisance. See also Bell v. Pierce, 51 N. Y. 12 (where the same rule was applied to a mistaken determination by tax assessors as to a person's domicile for the purposes of taxation); Barhyte v. Shepherd, 35 N. Y. 238; Chegaray v. Jenkins, 5 N. Y. 376 (where assessors were held not liable for an erroneous determination as to the liability of property to taxation); Lee v. Huff, 61 Ark. 494, 33 S. W. 846 (where an action against an officer was not allowed because the decision complained of was made after a hearing); Pruden v. Love, 67 Ga. 190 (where a city council which had declared a thing to be a nuisance was held liable because they had not given a hearing). In all these cases provision had been made by the law as construed by the courts for a hearing before quasi-judicial or administrative officers. The courts appear to regard determinations made after such a hearing as in the nature of judicial determinations, error in which, even as to jurisdiction, will not make the officer guilty of negligence, liable in damages.

performing it.[98] In the second place are legislative officers, that is, members of congress and the state legislatures and members of local legislative bodies, such as city councils. It may be laid down as a fundamental rule of the law that such officers are not liable to an action by one who believes himself to be injured by the way in which they have performed their legislative duties.[99] The members of state legislative bodies are usually accorded by the constitution a further immunity for all words spoken in the debate in the house to which they belong. This immunity, while broadly construed, does not justify slanderous remarks, whose utterance has no connection with the business before the house.[1] In the third place are the vast number of officers not holding courts, but discharging executive and administrative functions, whose discharge involves the exercise of judgment and discretion. Such officers are not liable for a mistaken exercise of such discretion.[2] In many of the cases on the liability of inferior judicial officers and officers discharging quasi-judicial or administrative functions, the opinions would seem to lay stress upon the absence of malice or corrupt intent as an important element in the determination of the immunity from liability.[3] But in most cases what is said in the opinion is merely dictum, inasmuch as the actual decision did not recognize the liability. There are, however, a few cases which actually decide that if the act complained of has been done with corrupt motives or malice

there is a liability to the person injured.[4] On the other hand, it has been distinctly held that if the officer whose acts are complained of keeps within his powers, his motives, however corrupt and malicious they may be, may not be made a reason for holding him liable for the damages caused by his acts.[5]

5. Acts of Subordinates and Predecessors. Public officers are not, as a general rule, liable for the acts of subordinates, even where such subordinates are employees rather than officers,[6] except where the negligence of such subordinates is attributable to the superior.[7] But ministerial officers are liable to an individual for the acts of their deputies where such officers owe a duty to such individuals. This rule is applied particularly to such officers as sheriffs, recorders of deeds, and clerks of courts.[8] This liability extends only to acts which the law compels the officer to perform,[9] and not to acts entirely extra-official and personal to the subordinate complained of, although the superior is responsible for acts done under color of authority which are illegal.[10] Nor does the liability for the acts of subordinates extend to acts which were directed by the complainant.[11] In case an officer has been held liable for an act of a subordinate, he has an action against such subordinate.[12] Public officers finally are not liable for the acts of predecessors.[13]

6. On Contracts. Officers are not personally liable on contracts made by them within the scope of their official authority,[14] unless the contract shows that they clearly intended to assume a personal liability.[15] Action on the part of an officer in excess of his legal authority will not have the necessary effect of imposing upon him a personal liability on the contract which he has signed, since those with whom he is dealing cannot be deceived by him. For the extent of his authority may be ascertained by an examination of the law.[16] But action in excess of authority is considered an element in the determination of the intention of the officer.[17]

E. Actions By or Against Officers[18] — 1. Capacity to Sue. Public officers need not be authorized by statute to bring suit, but have an implied authority as incident to their offices to bring all suits which the proper and faithful discharge of their official duties require.[19] But suits in which the government is the party in interest should be brought by officers in the name of the government,[20] or in the manner provided by the statute, as for example, in the name of the officer suing with the title of the office added.[21] Such suits may be for the enforcement of a private right of the public corporation which they represent, as for example a suit on a contract or for damages, or they may be brought to secure the aid of the court in the enforcement of the law, the execution of which has been intrusted to the officer or officers bringing the suit, as for example a mandamus,[22] or an injunction.[23] In suits brought by officers, while the presumption is in favor of the de jure character of a de facto incumbent,[24] if such de jure character is brought in question, the legal title to the office must be shown.[25]

2. Suits Against Officers.[26] Suits may also be brought against officers either on contracts made by them or in their representative capacity,[27] or for their tortious acts,[28] or to force them to obey the law, as through the application to them of the extraordinary legal[29] or equitable[30] remedies. In some cases it is provided by statute that notice of a certain period of time must be given an officer before an action for damages may be brought against him. In such cases the commencement of the action before giving the notice, or before the expiration of the legal period, makes the action premature.[31]

3. PARTIES. Suits against officers must, from the point of view of the proper parties plaintiff, be divided into suits the object of which is the maintenance of private rights, and suits in which it is sought to uphold the rights of the public generally. In the former class of suits no one is a proper party plaintiff whose rights are not alleged to have been violated by the officer against whom the action is brought. This rule is particularly applicable to suits for damages against officers, and is sometimes carried so far as to bar such suits where the damages are not peculiar to the party suing but common to all the public.[32] The rule is also applied to cases where it is sought to restrain action by officers,[33] or to force them to act where they illegally refuse to act.[34] There is one important exception to it. This is where an application is made to the court for a writ of habeas corpus. Application for such a writ may be made by one whose rights are not affected by the alleged unlawful imprisonment.[35] Furthermore the general rule may be changed by statute, which may provide for a popular action to be brought by any one regardless of the interest he may have in the suit.[36] In the case of suits of the second class, that is, those in which public interests are involved, the better rule would seem to be, although there is conflict, that any citizen or taxpayer is a proper party plaintiff to an action against an officer. This rule is naturally applicable only to actions like the mandamus[37] or the injunction,[38] where the purpose is either to secure or prevent official action. In a suit against an officer for an act which he had no right to perform, unless as an officer, he may be compelled to show that he has the prima facie legal title to the office. It is not sufficient to show that he is the de facto incumbent.[39]

Sufficiency of notice.— When a public officer is charged with various acts of official wrong-doing, individual and combined, the notice of action must set forth said acts of wrong-doing and the dates, times, and circumstances connected therewith, in a manner sufficient to enable defendant to make tender and amends in respect of one or more or all of the specific acts complained of; otherwise the action will be dismissed on exception to the form. them personally liable, the declaration or complaint should set forth the special circumstances which are relied on to establish the liability,[41] or the duty which, it is alleged, has been neglected,[42] and must aver that the officer had the means to perform the duty.[43] Where reliance is placed on malice, an intent to injure plaintiff should be clearly alleged.[44] In suits brought by officers in their official capacity an averment that plaintiff "duly qualified and entered upon his duties" is sufficient, such averment implying the doing of everything necessary to a proper qualification for office.[45]

5. Costs.[46] In actions to which officers are parties the general rule is that costs are not allowed against such officers. This is so in all cases in which the officer is acting in his representative capacity in the matter as to which the action arose.[47] The same rule is also applied in actions or proceedings relating to their official duties, provided such officers have not acted with gross negligence, in bad faith, or with malice.[48] In some cases, in order to discourage suits against officers, it is provided by statute that, if an officer sued as such succeeds in the action, he shall be entitled to double costs.[49]

F. Criminal Responsibility[50] — 1. In General. All officers are liable like ordinary persons for the violation of penal laws affecting all persons in the community. Their official position affords them no immunity from criminal responsibility.[51] In addition to their criminal responsibility as ordinary persons officers are criminally responsible for the violation of official duty. This liability is based either on the common law or upon some statute, and exists where there are no injurious results to any individual from the official misconduct.[52] The only exception to this rule is that judges of the higher courts are not by the common law criminally responsible for the violation of official duty.[53] The remedy in the case of these officers is by impeachment.[54] The criminal responsibility of officers for violation of official duty extends to de facto as well as de jure officers.[55]

2. By Common Law. It is a rule of the common law that a failure or neglect of an officer to perform a ministerial duty imposed upon him by law renders him guilty of a misdemeanor.[56] It would also seem that, notwithstanding the provisions of statute which have been disobeyed are, as respects the public, merely

Hence the issue that the alleged duty is not imposed by such statute is properly raised by demurrer.

43. Smith v. Wright, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 621, holding that in case of a failure to repair a bridge for which the action is brought it must be averred that the officers sued had a fund from which they might pay for the repairs. But see Merritt v. McNally, 14 Mont. 228, 36 Pac. 44, where it is held that a complaint against a public officer for non-performance of duty, which fails to show that the officer had the means to perform the duty, is not demurrable, as the want of means is an affirmative defense to be raised by answer.

directory, the neglect of the officer to observe them is a misdemeanor.[57] Where, however, the duty which has not been performed is one involving discretion the failure to perform it is not per se an indictable offense. The omission must be wilful and due to corrupt motives. This rule is particularly applicable to officers holding courts.[58] This rule of the common law is sometimes changed by statute so as to make indictable wilful neglect of duty without corruption. If this is the case it is unnecessary to allege and prove corruption.[59]

3. By Statute. In addition to the common-law criminal liability of officers the statutes often make it a crime for an officer to do particular things set forth therein.[60] Such statutes are to be construed strictly as ordinary penal statutes.[61] But no corrupt intent, unless corruption is made a necessary element of the crime, is necessary in order that an officer may be indicted under such a statute.[62] The law, however, often specifically provides that the act shall be wilful or malicious. In such case mere neglect not wilful or malicious is not sufficient.[63]

4. Prosecution and Punishment. Prosecutions of officers for offenses are governed by the rules applicable to criminal proceedings in general.[64] An indictment must set forth with clearness the particular facts constituting the illegality and allege a violation of official duty or the commission of an official crime.[65] Thus, where the law punishes as a crime the failure of an officer to pay over to his successor official funds in his possession at the expiration of his term, an indictment which fails to allege the expiration of the term is defective.[66] Inasmuch as de facto officers are criminally responsible for official crimes, an indictment of an officer need not allege that defendant duly qualified by taking the oath of office.[67] As a general thing the expiration of the term of office is no bar to a prosecution for official misconduct.[68] Where the prosecution is under a statute the punishment imposed must be such as is provided by the statute.[69]

V. LIABILITIES ON OFFICIAL BONDS.[70]

A. Nature and Existence of Liability in General — 1. Unnecessary, Excessive, or Illegal Bonds. The purpose of an official bond being to protect the government from loss due to the improper performance of official duty, as well as to insure the proper performance of such official duty, a bond purporting to be an official bond which is given when not required by the law has no legal effect.[71] The application of this principle results also in making void a bond which contains stipulations or conditions not required by law, if such stipulations cannot be separated from the lawful portion of the bond.[72] But a bond may be good, although for an excessive penalty.[73] So bonds are good also where the officials under such bonds were officers de facto only, since neither the principal nor sureties may be heard to impeach the official title of the principal.[74]

2. INSUFFICIENT, INFORMAL, OR DEFECTIVE BONDS. Inasmuch as the requirement of an official bond is made in the interest of protecting the public, the courts usually uphold the validity of an official bond, although the statutes regulating the form of the bond, or the method of its execution, delivery, approval, and filing have not been exactly complied with. In some cases it is specifically provided by statute that the statutory provisions as to form, etc., of the bond are to be construed as directory rather than mandatory.[75] Thus bonds are good where the principal has failed to sign the bond, if his name is inserted in the body of the bond;[76] where the name of the principal is signed to the bond but does not appear in the body of the bond;[77] where the bonds have not been delivered at the proper time,[78] or in the proper way,[79] or made to the proper person;[80] and where the bond was not approved,[81] or recorded.[82] Where, however, a bond is to be approved by one officer and filed with another it does not go into effect at the time of its approval but only when it is filed,[83] since an official bond does not go into effect until it has been delivered.[84]

3. Bonds Signed Upon Condition. Since official bonds have been provided with the idea of protecting the public, the courts usually lean to the view that the principal is to be regarded, in getting his bond, as the agent, not of the obligee, but of the other obligors, who are therefore bound by his acts.[85] Thus where a surety signs a bond in blank, but it was understood between him and the principal that the bond should not be delivered until the names of a certain number of other sureties had been obtained, such surety is bound where the bond is delivered and

85. See cases cited in the following notes.

Bond signed in blank.— It has been held that where it appears that one surety has not signed a bond and another has signed it, but no sum is stated for which he is bound, the bond is valid against the signer if there are no conditions by the sureties as to other signatures or as to the amount of their liability. People v. Stacy, 74 Cal. 373, 16 Pac. 192. See also Chicago v. Gage, 95 Ill. 593, 35 Am. all the other sureties were not obtained.[86] But the sureties are not liable if the obligees have any notice that the sureties have made conditions.[87]

B. Scope of Liability[88] — 1. In General. A general principle which governs the liability on an official bond is that such liability is to be determined by the terms of the bond,[89] even where these do not comply with the statute requiring the bond.[90] The bond so far as it imposes a liability is construed strictly.[91] Thus it does not include liability to a successful contestant for the office for the emoluments of the office received by the principal on the bond when an officer de facto,[92]

Ratification.— Where the sureties upon a bond know that it is blank for the amount of the penalty and that by filing the bond the officer will obtain money, it will be inferred that they ratified his act in filling the blank, rather than that they are intending to aid the officer to perpetrate a fraud, and in such a case, where the sureties after finding that there has been a defalcation by the officer took mortgages and other securities from him, it is evidence from which a jury may infer that authority had been given or that a ratification had been made. nor liability for penalties imposed on the officer for dereliction of duty.[93] The extent of the liability of the surety is not to be determined by the liability of the principal, which by law is frequently more extensive than that of the surety.[94]

2. Neglect or Malfeasance of Official Duty. It goes without saying that sureties on official bonds are liable for negligence or malfeasance of their principal in the performance of acts which are done virtute officii. Thus they are liable for the loss of official funds by their principal to the same extent as is the principal.[95] The bond providing usually for the faithful discharge by the principal of his official duties, the condition of the bond is considered to have been broken by the mere negligence without corruption of the principal in the performance of a ministerial duty,[96] which performance does involve the exercise of discretion,[97] and where the duty which has not been faithfully discharged was owing to the person injured such person may sue on the bond.[98]

3. Acts Outside of Official Duty. An official bond is not regarded as imposing liability for the purely personal acts of officers not done as a part of or in connection with their official duty, as for example, the receipt of money which it was not the officer's duty to receive, or the arrest of an individual, or the seizure of property without a warrant.[99] But in most states acts done by color of office are regarded as acts for which sureties on official bonds are liable. Thus where an officer having an execution seizes the goods of one person when the execution is directed to another, or, having a warrant, arrests the wrong person, the sureties on his bond are liable.[1]

4. Acts of Deputies or Agents. The liability of sureties on official bonds extends to the acts of deputies and agents of their principal, the negligence or malfeasance of such deputies and agents being imputed to the principal.[2]

5. Interest and Damages. In all cases of misappropriation by an officer of funds which have legally come into his possession his sureties are liable not only for the amount misappropriated but also for interest, which is sometimes so high as to constitute a penalty from the time of the misappropriation.[3] But in no case are sureties on an official bond liable for exemplary damages in the absence of a statute to that effect. Only damage for the actual injury caused by the default of the officer may be recovered,[4] and in case the government performs work which the principal on an official bond has neglected to perform the sureties are liable will not be construed more favorably in behalf of sureties than of principals when the question at issue is the construction of a statute regulating official duty. Gilbert v. Isham, 16 Conn. 525.

Money illegally raised.— Sureties are responsible for money actually received by an officer, although the resolution under which such money was received was improperly passed by the authority which raised the money. Thus the sureties of a county treasurer were held responsible for his defalcation of moneys borrowed by authority of a board of supervisors even though such board exceeded its powers in borrowing the money. only for a reasonable compensation and not for an extravagant sum paid by the government for having the work done.[5]

C. Period of Liability — 1. In General. Sureties on an official bond are liable only for acts done during the term of office which the bond was intended to cover.[6] That is, their liability is only as to acts done after the execution of the bond,[7] unless the bond is retrospective in its provisions.[8]

2. After Expiration of Term. Sureties on official bonds are not discharged by the expiration of the term of their principal, where by law he is to hold over and no successor qualifies.[9] But except in the case of officers holding over by law,[10] sureties are not, in cases where officers are their own successors, liable for any defaults of their principal occurring after the expiration of the term covered by the bond, and the bond is presumed to be given for the legal term.[11]

against the sureties.[14] Sureties on the last bond are liable also for moneys paid to their principal during the term covered by the bond, but because of transactions which took place during the preceding term,[15] even if such moneys are used to cover up defalcations occurring during a preceding term.[16] Sureties on the bond for the last term are entitled, however, in the absence of appropriation, to have all payments made by the officer during that term credited to the liability for that term, even if the officer is shown to have been a defaulter during a preceding term.[17] But the principal on the bond has the right to appropriate moneys coming into his hands during the second term to the payment of an indebtedness of the first term, and, where such appropriations are made by him, the sureties on the second bond will be liable for defalcations occurring during the second term due to such defalcation.[18] But if the principal has paid the moneys into a general account, and has made no appropriation, such moneys are applied to the satisfaction of the oldest debts in accordance with common-law rules applicable to private payments.[19]

D. Discharge of Sureties — 1. CHANGE IN EMOLUMENTS, POWERS, OR TERM OF OFFICE. Sureties on official bonds are not discharged from liability by the passage of a statute changing the emoluments or powers of an office held by their principal, provided the new powers are appropriate to the office,[20] unless the new law provides for a special bond.[21] But the sureties on an official bond are discharged by changes in the office which are so great as to make the office quite a different one from what it was when the bond was executed. Instances of such changes are an extension of the term of the office,[22] and the enlargement of the territorial jurisdiction of the office.[23] Where new duties and powers not appropriate to the office are added to it after the execution of the bonds, the sureties are not responsible for the faithful performance of such duties but remain responsible merely for the performance of the original duties.[24]

2. NEGLIGENCE OR FAILURE ON THE PART OF THE GOVERNMENT. Sureties on official bonds further are not discharged by the negligence of the officers of the government or their failure properly to perform their duties,[25] even if such action is

L. 902, where the view is adopted that if "the nature of the office is so changed that the duties are materially altered, so as to affect the peril of the sureties, the bond is avoided." This case held that an official bond of a court bailiff was made void by a change in the jurisdiction of the court to which he was attached from £20 to £50.

Basis of liability.— While in most of these cases the liability is derived from the general theory as to the obligation assumed by sureties on official bonds, in some, the liability is based either upon a particular covenant in the bond (Mahaska Co. v. Ingalls, 14 Iowa 170), or upon a specific provision of statute (State v. Stevens, 103 Ind. 55, 2 N. E. 214, 53 Am. Rep. 482). It is perfectly competent for the legislature to pass such a statute. Morrow v. Wood, 56 Ala. 1.

Release of portion of sureties.— Sometimes it is provided by statute that one or more of the sureties may apply to be released and that in such case the principal must give a new bond or the office will be declared vacant. Under these conditions it is sometimes held that the application of the sureties discharges them from all further liability. Cochise County v. Ritter, 3 Ariz. 208, 73 Pac. 448. In others it is held that the sureties are not relieved from liability until a new bond is given or the office declared vacant. Armstrong v. Pugh, 19 Ala. 209. See also Hewes v. People, 48 Ill. App. 439. Here it was held that if under the statute sureties have the right to oust an officer from his office, where, in case they desire to withdraw, the officer fails to file a new bond and they do not avail themselves of their right they are liable for his defaults even if they have served a notice that they desire to withdraw as sureties. Unless specific provision is made by statute (Jones v. Gallatin County, 78 Ky. 491), not only are the sureties so applying discharged, but as well the other sureties in accordance with the general rule that the release of one of the sureties upon a joint and several bond discharges all (People not discharged where such new bonds are by law merely cumulative in their effect.[30]

5. Settlement by Principal and Release of Bond. Sureties are discharged by the payment by their principal of all moneys due to his successor in office.[31] But a settlement of the accounts of an officer will not relieve the sureties where the officer has been guilty of concealment.[32] An official bond is not, however, satisfied by its cancellation by an unauthorized officer;[33] and as the officer to whom a bond is given takes no beneficial interest but only a legal interest, he may not, except as prescribed by law, release or discharge the obligation of an official bond.[34]

E. Lien. An official bond, often as a result of statute, creates a lien upon the property of both the principal and sureties which is to be enforced by proceedings in equity.[35] The effect of such a lien depends upon the statute creating it. Thus in some cases it does not take precedence of mortgage and homestead claims.[36] In others it is given the force of a mortgage when recorded in the mortgage as well as in the bond book, but not if recorded in the bond book alone.[37] Such a lien does not apply to land to which the officer has only the legal title and in which he has no beneficial interest;[38] but as to all land to which it applies it takes precedence of all rights and interests acquired by purchasers subsequent to the date at which it attaches, which purchasers are charged by law with notice of.[39]

F. Enforcement[40] — 1. Nature and Form of Action — a. In General. Actions on bonds which subject the obligors to a penalty are penal actions and cannot be

v. Buster, 11 Cal. 215). In such cases, in order to be relieved, sureties must see to it that the law is complied with, and particularly that, if required by statute, a new bond is given. Thus the erasure in the bond of the names of certain sureties and the substitution of others will not discharge those whose names are erased. State v. Matthews, 57 Miss. 1; Stevens v. Allmen, 19 Ohio St. 485. It has also been held that sureties are not discharged by a new bond given, not on their application, but at the instance of the principal. Hickerson v. Price, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 623. Unless it is specifically so stated in the law the sureties have no right in such case to be discharged. Ex p. Weber, 5 Leg. Gaz. (Pa.) 252. The North Carolina and Tennessee cases hold that under the law certain officers whose terms are no longer than one year must give bonds every year, and that bonds given the second year are not in place of the bonds given in the first year but are cumulative thereto, as to the discharge of all duties not performed at the time of their execution.

Subrogation of sureties.— In case sureties pay judgments in suits obtained on such bonds they may be subrogated to the lien of the state on the property of the principal. Randolph v. Brown, 115 Ala. 677, 22 So. 524. But the state in the absence of a provision of law may not enlarge the rights of the surety by agreement. maintained in another state.[41] But, where official bonds are of a strictly civil character, suits may be brought upon them in another state, but the courts of such state will not enforce such bonds in accordance with the statute of the state under which they were made where such statute differs from the common law.[42]

b. Summary Proceedings.[43] In some states summary judicial proceedings are permitted for the enforcement of an official bond.[44] Where this is the case, the remedy, being in derogation of the common law, must be strictly pursued.[45] In other cases bonds are enforced by the issue, in accordance with the statute, of a warrant of distress under which both chattels and lands of the principal and surety may be sold.[46] Here again the statute must be strictly followed, and if it provides that chattels must first be sold a sale of the land before the chattels are sold is void.[47] But in the absence of a statute authorizing such procedure the fact that a judgment has been obtained against the officer will not authorize judgment to be entered against the sureties upon his official bond upon motion.[48]

2. Persons Entitled to Sue. The law distinguishes two classes of bonds, one to protect the government in its corporate capacity, the other to protect the public in their dealings with officers. The government alone has a right of action on the first class of bonds,[49] and if such bonds have been made to a person holding an official position, such as the governor, they are to be regarded as given, not to the person but to the position, and the successors or official, but not personal, representatives may sue on them, even if such successors are not named in the bond.[50] If, however, the bond has been made by mistake to the wrong officer, or, although made to the proper officer, is not good as a statutory official bond, it is regarded as a common-law bond, and as made to the person and not to the position. Consequently suit may not be brought upon it by the official successor to the person to whom it was made.[51] In some jurisdictions, further, the state is the proper party in actions brought to indemnify individuals for damages suffered from the defaults of officers, or permission of some state officer is required before suit may be brought; and it is generally held that the state is the proper party in such actions where no other method of suit has been provided by statute.[52] In the case of bonds whose purpose is the protection of individual members of the public, plaintiff or person to whose use the suit on the bond is brought must show special damage in order to recover.[53]

3. Defendants.[54] An action on an official undertaking, in form joint and several, may be brought against the sureties alone, without joining the officer.[55] An official bond being a joint and several obligation, plaintiff may make defendants in an action on such bond all or any of the sureties, and is not obliged to sue all.[56] Where official bonds are joint and several, as is usually the case, an action on such bond may be brought against each obligor or all or any obligors, and, in a suit against joint and several obligors in which process is not served on all the defendants, judgment may be taken against those served, and the judgment is no bar to subsequent proceedings against those not served at the rendition of such judgment.[57] It has several times been held that the administrator or executor of a deceased joint obligor is not a proper party to a suit on an official bond, as no such action can be maintained against him.[58]

In Pennsylvania a statute, act June 14, 1836, prohibits separate action by different plaintiffs on the same official bond, and requires every person interested to join in a suit commenced, instead of bringing one for himself. The pendency of such a suit is a bar to subsequent action on the same instrument against the same parties and may be so pleaded (Hartz v. Com., 1 Grant 359), but such act does not preclude a separate suit in the name of the commonwealth against each obligor in such a bond (Clement v. Com., 95 Pa. St. 107).

plaintiff, unless required by statute, need not first obtain judgment on the default complained of, since the obligation of a surety on an official bond is primary and not secondary;[59] and, in case an officer has rendered it impossible to reach him personally, no demand is necessary before bringing suit on the bond for moneys which such officer has neglected to pay over or to enforce a judgment against him for official misconduct.[60] Where a duty is imposed on an officer to turn over moneys to his successor on the expiration of his term of office, no demand is necessary before bringing suit on the bond.[61]

5. Defenses — a. In General. In an action on the bond the sureties can make no defenses not open to the principal,[62] and in particular are estopped from alleging any irregularities in the appointment or election of their principal,[63] or in the bond itself.[64] Furthermore the sureties on an official bond are not permitted to advance as a defense to an action on the bond the fact that moneys received by their principal in the performance of his official duties were received because of the unlawful or improper or irregular action of some other authority or person.[65] Finally, inasmuch as negligence on the part of public officers does not discharge the sureties on official bonds,[66] such negligence cannot be pleaded as a defense to an action on such bonds, whether such negligence has to do with the qualification of the principal,[67] the supervision to be exercised over their principal by some other official,[68] or the bringing suit for the satisfaction of debts.[69]

b. Effect of Judgment Against Principal. Judgment obtained against a principal in an official bond is generally regarded as prima facie, but not conclusive, evidence, in a suit against the sureties to enforce the liability on the bond.[70] need not wait until the expiration of his term of office before suing on his bond.[71] Statutes of limitations relative to suits or penalties or ordinary actions do not usually apply to actions on official bonds.[72] But actions on official bonds are barred by statutes of limitations relative to actions for official misconduct;[73] and actions on official bonds, when brought by the state, are often held to be barred by the special statutes of limitations affecting actions of the state generally. A period of limitation commonly provided is ten years.[74] Where special statutes of limitations have been provided, the time when the statute begins to run depends on the wording of the statute.[75]

7. Pleading[76] — a. Declaration, Petition, or Complaint. Rejoinder.— Where, in an action upon the bond of a county treasurer, plaintiffs in their replication assign a breach alleging an accounting and a balance found due, a subsequent receipt by the treasurer of a stated sum and the drawing of orders on him in favor of divers individuals for various sums setting forth the orders specially, and a presentment and non-payment of the same, and defendants rejoined denying the accounting and subsequent receipt of money, and yet undertook to answer in reference to each particular order for money set forth in the replication alleging same to be paid, others not presented, etc., it was held that the assignment substantially presented but one breach and that the rejoinder of defendants was bad for duplicity and as presenting commission,[78] nor to allege that the officer took the oath of office, nor that a certificate of election was issued to him,[79] nor assign breaches in the declaration,[80] nor to aver that the penalty of the bond has not been paid.[81] Furthermore, if an officer's term is for a fixed period and not until his successor has qualified, it is not necessary in an action on his bond for failure to pay money over to his successor to allege that his successor has duly qualified,[82] or that his own term has expired. This fact may appear in the statement of facts.[83] Finally, it is not necessary to aver that the bond was taken by the proper authority,[84] or that it was properly filed, although in such case it should be alleged that the bond was delivered and the principal acted under it,[85] or approved;[86] but it must be alleged that defendants executed the bond,[87] and the entire bond or its condition should be set out in the declaration or complaint.[88] Further, in an action on a bond for conversion of money, the declaration should allege that money came into the hands of the officer after the execution of the bond,[89] and that such money was improperly retained.[90] But defects, such as failure to allege that money came into the hands of the officer after execution of the bond, are cured by the verdict;[91] and where a petition in a joint action against the principal and sureties states a good cause of action against the principal, a recovery may be had against him, without proof of the execution of the bond.[92] A mistake in the name of the former party, it has been held, is amended after judgment by the other parts of the record.[93]

b. Plea or Answer. In the case, however, of answers to the declaration or complaint in suits on official bonds, the rules of pleading would seem to be stricter, applying the principle which the courts always endeavor to apply, of upholding an official bond wherever possible.[94] Thus if the complaint alleges several breaches

Conclusion.— A plea that a treasurer was not requested before suit brought to pay over the moneys in his hands in answer to a breach that he refused to pay, although par-

the insufficiency of one of the breaches is not a ground for demurrer to the entire complaint.[95] In particular cases the following pleas have been held bad: That the bond was without consideration;[96] that of non damnificatus, and that if plaintiff has been damnified it was of his own wrong;[97] that of nil debet;[98] that of nul tiel record;[99] or that, since the breach assigned in the declaration, the government had accepted another bond from defendant.[1] It is a good plea that the wrong officer of the government is made plaintiff.[2]

c. Demurrer.[3] A mistake in the name of the party plaintiff in the suit cannot be reached by general demurrer,[4] although it has been held that failure to aver non-payment of the penalty of the bond may be so reached.[5] A demurrer to the allegations in the complaint "for the reason that said several allegations or either of them does not entitle the plaintiff to the relief sought" should be overruled since it does not raise any question.[6] A general demurrer to a plea that plaintiff fraudulently neglected to bring suit admits the fraud.[7]

d. Issues and Proof. Proof of the necessary allegations in the complaint is absolutely necessary where they are not admitted by defendant.[8] Thus where the action is brought on a five-thousand-dollar bond and the bond offered in evidence is for ten thousand dollars, no recovery can be had;[9] and where separate allegations are set forth in the complaint, proof of any allegation must be given in order to sustain a recovery upon it,[10] but in such case proof of any one will sustain a recovery.[11] Thus, again, except as to defalcations happening in one of two successive terms, plaintiff must show that the act alleged as a breach occurred after the execution of the bond,[12] while defendant must prove all items of discharge where plaintiff has shown the amount chargeable to him.[13] Because of the rule which estops an officer or sureties on his bond from denying his title to the office, where the bond recites his official character[14] no proof is required of the election or appointment of an officer in an action on his bond.[15]

8. Evidence[16] — a. Presumptions and Burden of Proof. The usual rule that the burden of proof is upon him who alleges the fact is applied in these cases.[17]

Release.— A plea setting up an agreement by a sheriff that he would release and discharge the sureties of a deputy is bad, unless a consideration is alleged. Barnard v. Darling, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 28.

Suggestion of defect in bond.— Under a statute providing that if an official bond is defective in not containing the conditions required by law a party interested may by action suggest the defect and recover against the officer and his sureties, it is a sufficient suggestion of the defect to attach a copy of the bond to the complaint in an action on bond. But presumptions in favor of the government are commonly made when suit is brought on the bond. Thus it will be presumed, in case an officer does not have in his possession all the money he should have, that he converted to his own use the missing sum.[18] Further, it will be presumed in the case of two successive terms, where there is a different bond for each term, that a defalcation occurred during the second term and that the sureties on the second bond are liable,[19] unless they can prove that, as a matter of fact, the money reported to be in the principal's hands at the beginning of the term was not there, and that the principal had been guilty of a defalcation, prior to the execution of the bond on which suit is brought, which fact they are permitted to prove.[20]

b. Admissibility and Sufficiency. The general rules of civil actions govern the admissibility and sufficiency of evidence in actions on official bonds.[21] It has been held that the following are admissible as evidence against sureties in actions on official bonds: Statements and documents, such as receipts or reports, made or signed by their principal and official books and accounts kept by him;[22] statements of accounts and books kept by accounting officers, showing amounts of money coming into the hands of the principal during his term of office;[23] and reports by experts who examined his books.[24] But such books, statements, and reports are not generally regarded as conclusive.[25] But evidence as to transactions having no connection with the official life of the office, such as evidence as to his habits and manner of living, is not admissible,[26] except that, where those having control over the officer have permitted him to mingle public money with his own, his pecuniary embarrassments are competent to rebut the presumption that he has not applied public moneys to meet personal liabilities.[27] In all these actions on official bonds the receipt by the principal of checks, drafts, and other evidences of debt is treated as the receipt of money, for which the sureties are liable; but the sureties may show that certificates of deposit given by insolvent banks and treated as cash in the settlement of the accounts of their principal were as a matter of fact of no value.[28] In the absence of fraud a court record showing the execution of the bond is conclusive as to such fact.[29] Evidence of a denial on the part of the officer of any right of the government to money collected by him as the officer of such government is sufficient to establish a conversion of such money.[30] Where the evidence shows a state of facts from which the inference is not deducible that the officer received the money sought to be charged against his surety, it is error to leave the cause to the jury upon the hypothesis that he did receive it.[31] The question of whether a defalcation occurred during the term for which the bond is given is properly submitted to the jury upon conflicting evidence.[32]

9. JUDGMENT. Judgments in proceedings upon official bonds are, in the absence of statute, governed by the rules applicable to judgments in general.[33] Upon the trial of a joint action against the principal and the sureties for official negligence, the judgment may be against any number of the defendants as the testimony warrants.[34] Judgments against sureties are not void for mere irregularities. Thus a judgment for damages instead of the penalty, or one for the "plaintiffs" instead of for the "state" is good.[35] But a separate judgment should be rendered for St. 645, 650, 31 Atl. 67); but that decision, while supported as to the conclusion that offspring meant issue, was disapproved on the ground that the same provisions in the same will imported an indefinite failure of issue and therefore created not a defeasible fee, but an estate tail (Barber v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 166 U. S. 83, 92, 17 S. Ct. 488, 41 L. ed. 925); the latter opinion, so far, upholding that expressed in an earlier stage of the same litigation by the circuit court, which, however, also based its decision that A took at least an estate tail if not a fee simple on the ground that "'offspring' is a word of limitation, not of purchase" (Barber v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 69 Fed. 501, 504).

"For" has been said to be synonymous with "on" or nearly so, where, connecting the descriptions of two possible facts, it may be taken to imply that the one must come into existence, if ever, at the same time as the other, as in the phrase "power of reentry, 'for' non-payment of rent." Doe v. Smith, 1 B. & B. 97, 113, 5 E. C. L. 525.

66. As where it was ordered that a nonsuit be entered "upon payment of costs" and held that the order was not conditional, that the effect of the phrase was merely "to impose an obligation upon the plaintiff to pay the costs occasioned by his default," the breach of which obligation might be actionable (Dana v. Gill, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 242, 243, 20 Am. Dec. 255); or where, in a promissory note, the phrase "on the return of this receipt" followed the promise to pay (Frank v. Wessels, 64 N. Y. 155, 158); or in construing an agreement that, after adjustment of an account, six months' credit be given the defendant, "on . . paying interest on the amount" (Dodd v. Ponsford, 6 C. B. N. S. 324, 333, 95 E. C. L. 324).

76. "On and from."— In this phrase, connecting with a given date the statement that a railroad ticket, on which it occurs, is "good for one continuous passage," the word "on" signifies that such ticket is good for passage on the day named, and "from" covers the whole time to be consumed in the trip (Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Powell, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 212, 213, 35 S. W. 841), and the passage authorized by such ticket must begin on the day named (Demilley v. Texas, etc., R. Co., 91 Tex. 215, 216, 42 S. 78. "On a passage" is a phrase applied in marine insurance to a vessel, and equivalent to "at sea" or "not having arrived at her port of destination" (Washington Ins. Co. v. White, 103 Mass. 238, 241, 4 Am. Rep. 543; Wales v. China Mut. Ins. Co., 8 Allen (Mass.) 380, 383. See also MARINE INSURANCE, 26 Cyc. 596), "on a voyage" (Wales v. China Mut. Ins. Co., 8 Allen (Mass.) 380, 383).

A vessel is on a passage after she has left her port of lading, fully prepared to proceed to her port of destination, and with a real intent to do so, although she comes to anchor again on account of bad winds, and the intention of proceeding as soon as wind and weather will permit is not relinquished. Bowen v. Hope Ins. Co., 20 Pick. (Mass.) 275, 279, 32 Am. Dec. 213.

On the same voyage, used to qualify the description of causes of loss, in a statute limiting the liability of ship-owners for such loss, this phrase is intended to confine the participation, in the apportionment therein authorized, to the freighters for a single voyage, and not to permit the ship-owners to bring into the compensation losses sustained on prior or other voyages. 81. "On arrival" is a phrase which, when qualifying an order to a factor to sell, is to be taken in its literal meaning and authorizes no delay. So held, even though an immediate sale must be below market price, in Evans v. Root, 7 N. Y. 186, 189, 57 Am. Dec. 512. But see Burnard v. Voss, 8 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 221, 6 Cinc. L. Bul. 339.

"On arrival . . . to be delivered . . . with all convenient speed, but not to exceed" a given day does not warrant the arrival of goods in question in time for delivery on such day, but means that in case of failure to arrive in such time the buyer need not accept them. "The rule ought not to be extended to cases which do not fall precisely within it." Downes v. Phœnix Bank, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 297, 300.

"On demand after date" has been diversely defined (Foley v. Emerald, etc., Brewing Co., 61 N. J. L. 428, 429, 39 Atl. 650), as equivalent to "on demand," rendering a note so payable immediately due (Hitchings v. Edmonds, 132 Mass. 338, 339), or "on demand after date" precluding a demand on that day (Foley v. Emerald, etc., Brewing Co., 61 N. J. L. 428, 430, 39 Atl. 650; Crim v. Starkweather, 88 N. Y. 339, 342, 42 Am. Rep. 250).

34. So in a contract whereby it appears that such is the intention of the parties. Portner v. Wilfahrt, 85 Minn. 73, 75, 88 N. W. 418; Horton v. Seymour, 82 Minn. 535, 541, 85 N. W. 551; Branch v. Dawson, 33 Minn. 399, 400, 23 N. W. 552; Brown v. Brown, 28 Minn. 501, 11 N. W. 64.

Deposits, being payable on demand, are not actionable until demand is made. See ON DEPOSIT.

For cases in which actual demand has been held a prerequisite to maturity of negotiable instruments see COMMERCIAL PAPER, 7 Cyc. 847–851.

In a condition of discharge of a mortgage, "if on demand there shall be paid," etc., refers to "payment by the mortgagor upon a demand made upon him, rather than payment by a stranger to the deed with or without a demand." Popple v. Day, 123 Mass. 520, 522.

An agreement to furnish coal "on demand," the daily demand not to exceed a certain quantity, does not require such demand to be made daily, it "may be made for the future." Watson Coal, etc., Co. v. James, 72 Iowa 184, 191, 33 N. W. 622.

ONE THOUSAND. A numeral whose meaning, when employed in certain connections, may be controlled by usage or custom.[76]

ON HAND. A phrase which has been held ineffective, through vagueness, as a descriptive term for the purposes of identification of property by third persons.[77] As used between parties to a transaction, with reference to a given class of articles of commerce affected thereby, a term which would seem to relate to those, of that class, which are not merely in possession, but are also stock in trade in the regular course of business of a given person or concern.[78] Used in a will to describe the money which was the subject of a legacy, a term which may include a sum in the hands of an agent, in gross, without deducting his commissions.[79] (See CASH ON HAND.)

ONLY. A word of restriction or exclusion,[80] that is, of restriction, as to that which it qualifies,[81] of exclusion as to other things;[82] but it does not exclude that which is not within the contemplation of the provision in which it occurs.[83] It is also employed as meaning exclusively,[84] (and) in no other mode;[85] wholly.[86] Again may be used in the sense of "merely";[87] and has been substituted (inaccurately) for "except."[88]

"Onerous donation" is a gift burdened with charges imposed by the donor. Ackerman v. Larner, 116 La. 101, 116, 40 So. 581.

"Onerous title" is that title which is created by valuable consideration as the payment of money, the rendition of services, and the like, or by the performance of conditions or payment of charges to which the property was subject (Noe v. Card, 14 Cal. 576, 597; Scott v. Ward, 13 Cal. 458, 471; Kircher v. Murray, 54 Fed. 617, 624); "the cause, in virtue of which we acquire a thing by payment of its value in money, in another thing, or in services, or by means of certain charges and conditions, to which we subject ourselves, as purchase, exchange, renting and dowry" (Escriche Dict. [quoted in Noe v. Card, 14 Cal. 576, 597; Yates v. Houston, 3 Tex. 433, 453]).

Application.—The supreme court shall have appellate jurisdiction only does not mean "the supreme court only shall have appellate jurisdiction." People v. Richmond, 16 Colo. 274, 284, 26 Pac. 929.

Insidious tendency, in a request to charge. — Of a request to charge that the fact that defendant employed a watchman is "only" evidence as to the additional care exercised by it to avoid inflicting injury, it was said: "The significance of the word 'only' would in effect render the conduct of the flagman immaterial." Ayers v. Pittsburg, etc., R. Co., 201 Pa. St. 124, 128, 50 Atl. 958.

Used in creating a separate estate for a married woman, to the exclusion of the husband, as in the phrase "to her use only" (Ozley v. Ikelheimer, 26 Ala. 332, 336); "to and for the only use and benefit" of (Cuthbert v. Wolfe, 19 Ala. 373, 377); "only for the use and benefit of" (Nixon v. Rose, 12 Gratt. ONLY PROPER USE. Own (or peculiar) exclusive use.[89]

ON OR ABOUT. With regard to time, a relative term, sufficiently definite in certain connections,[90] but rendering the statement which it modifies insufficient for purposes to which definite accuracy is requisite.[91] With regard to place, anywhere or everywhere upon, but not outside of.[92]

ON OR BEFORE. With relation to a specified time or event, immediately at or at any time in advance of, the instant of such time or event;[93] that is to say

89. Caldwell v. Pickens, 39 Ala. 514, 520, where it is said: "These words are much stronger than 'own' and 'proper,' when found separately. Whether we attach to the word 'proper' the meaning of 'own,' or of 'peculiar' . . . the word 'only' remains, which is strictly a word of exclusion."

90. Cohn v. Wright, 89 Cal. 86, 88, 26 Pac. 643.

Commission of a crime "on or about" a given date see INDICTMENTS AND INFORMATIONS, 22 Cyc. 317; INTOXICATING LIQUORS, 23 Cyc. 225 note 44, 91. Cohn v. Wright, 89 Cal. 86, 88, 26 Pac. 643; Lee v. Greenwich, 48 N. Y. App. Div. 391, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 160. Compare Santa Monica Lumber, etc., Co. v. Hege, (Cal. 1897) 48 Pac. 69, 71; Paine v. State Land-Office Com'r, 66 Mich. 245, 248, 33 N. W. 491. But see Mitchell v. Penfield, 8 Kan. 186.

"Sailed on or about."—No warranty can be predicated on language so indefinite as "sailed on or about" a given day, when applied to a ship, in a contract for the sale of goods to arrive by such vessel, and it is doubted if a like expression in an application for a policy of marine insurance could be held a warranty. Hawes v. Lawrence, 4 N. Y. 345, 346, 348.

An averment that a fact occurred "on or about" a certain day is not an averment that it took place on any distinct day or time. Conroy v. Oregon Constr. Co., 23 Fed. 71, 73, 10 Sawy. 630. But the defect may be cured, or rendered immaterial, by a sufficient and definite statement elsewhere. People v. Flock, 100 Mich. 512, 59 N. W. 237; National Wall Paper Co. v. Associated Manufacturers' Mut. F. Ins. Co., 60 N. Y. App. Div. 222, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 124.

Whether or not the statute of limitations has run cannot be ascertained from such an averment of the date of a cause of action (Conroy v. Oregon Constr. Co., 23 Fed. 71, 73, 10 Sawy. 630), or of an offense (U. S. v. Winslow, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,742, 3 Sawy. 337, 342), and when the date of a cause of action is so alleged in the complaint, the defense of such statute is only available by answer (Conroy v. Oregon Constr. Co., 23 Fed. 71, 74, 10 Sawy. 630).

Effectiveness, if any, of statement of time so modified.— It has been said that such averment "amounts to nothing, so far as time is concerned" (Conroy v. Oregon Constr. Co., 23 Fed. 71, 73, 10 Sawy. 630); but there are slight indications that it may, under some circumstances, be regarded as expressing a period within a reasonable limit. For example: Of a statement in a claim of lien that the contract on which it was based was made "on or about the 1st day of July" it was said: "The words 'on or about' leave the time when the contract was made somewhat indefinite and uncertain, but we think the language used cannot be held to extend back to the 24th of May, and that it should be limited to time alleged in the complaint," namely, July 1st (Santa Monica Lumber, etc., Co. v. Hege, (Cal. 1897) 48 Pac. 69, 71); and the reason given for holding too indefinite, under a statute requiring claims for land to be filed within six months after it should take effect, a bill to secure title, which stated that such a claim was filed "on or about" the day named, with which the six months ended, was, that "on or about" said date "is just as consistent with a day or two after as before" (Paine v. State Land-Office Com'r, 66 Mich. 245, 248, 33 N. W. 491).

92. Thompson v. Banks, 43 N. H. 540, 541, as to a right to lay lumber "on or about" a mill privilege.

"On or about the premises."—As used in a statute prohibiting sale, without license, of liquor to be drunk in the locality so described, the phrase, through the force of "about" as distinct from "on," includes "places over which the seller has no legal right to exercise authority or control, but which are yet so near to his premises, and so situated in relation thereto, that to permit the liquor sold by him to be drunk at them would produce the very evil in kind, though not in degree, which the prohibition to drinking it on his premises was intended to prevent." Brown v. State, 31 Ala. 353, 358; Easterling v. State, 30 Ala. 46, 48. For examples showing the scope of this phrase see Whaley v. State, 87 Ala. 83, 6 So. 380; Powell v. State, 63 Ala. 177; Pearce v. State, 40 Ala. 720; Christian v. State, 40 Ala. 376; Patterson v. State, 36 Ala. 297. It has been held to include a place beyond the state line. Patterson v. State, 36 Ala. 297, 298 [doubted by Byrd, J., in Christian v. State, 40 Ala. 376, 378].

93. Sheerer v. Manhattan L. Ins. Co., 20 Fed. 886, 888.

Defined as "between the date" when the expression is used "and" the day specified.—In re Public Road in Middlesex, etc., 4 N. J. L. 290.

Said to be equivalent to "'within' a certain period," or "at or before," and subject to like application of the rules of construction. Leader v. Plante, 95 Me. 339, 341, 50 Atl. 54, 85 Am. St. Rep. 415.

A contract to convey land whenever the whole consideration, the last instalment of which is due on or before a certain date, is paid, entitles the proposed grantee, if he pays the whole before that date, to an imme-to the exclusion of any time after that to which the proposition has relation, not after.[94]

ONROERENDE. Literally "Immoveable." As applied to property, land; real estate; and so to be construed, as well as its equivalent, "vaste staat," when found in Dutch wills, deeds, and antenuptial contracts, relating to property in New York.[95]

ON SHARES. A term which, when describing the relative rights of parties to proceeds accruing under an agreement between them, means that they are to share equally.[96] (On Shares: Cultivation of Crops, see CROPS. Renting, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.)

ON STORE. As used of the delivery of grain at a warehouse, in a receipt for such grain, a phrase, interpreted according to a certain local custom, meaning that the grain is sold to the warehouseman, and that the price is to be lifted at such time as suits the person leaving the grain, and at such rate as it is then bringing in the market.[97]

ON THE LINE OF. Along, or parallel to, the general direction of;[98] near the line of;[99] but not necessarily touching or bounded by.[1]

ON THE PART OF. As against.[2] When used in describing an inheritance, as "on the part of" a specified parent, words which embrace not only the parent named, but all the ancestors of that parent paternal and maternal, and exclude the line of the other; an inheritance on the part of the father, or of the mother, remains in the line from which it was derived, to the exclusion of the heirs of the other as such.[3]

ON TRIAL. Actually in progress before the court (and jury, if any).[4] When used adverbially to indicate time, the phrase may refer to the trial in court,[5] or it diate conveyance. Wall v. Simpson, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 155, 22 Am. Dec. 72.

"Operated in this state" applies to a railroad which has passenger and freight depots, round-house, switch-yards, side-tracks and terminal facilities within the state in question although its terminus, to which they belong, is theoretically in another, and it reaches them from such theoretical terminus, over a leased line of road. Quincy, etc., R. Co. v. People, 156 Ill. 437, 441, 41 N. E. 162. "'Lands used in operating a railroad' is tantamount to the expression, land used 'about' the operation of the road. Depot buildings, water-houses, and other buildings, and the lots on which they are built, which are in any manner used about the railroad and its operation, are necessarily included within the meaning of the statute." So held in construing a provision by which such lands were exempt from state and county taxes. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co. v. Bradley, 66 Miss. 518, 519, 6 So. 321. See also Burlington, etc., R. Co. v. Lancaster Co., 15 Nebr. 251, 18 N. W. 71.

An agreement to "operate and manage" a drawbridge and pay all the expenses of the same, the party so promising to be reimbursed for the expense of "operating and managing of the draw" includes "the opening and closing of the same, as well as the diligence to be used in protecting and preserving it from injury and doing injury," but "was never intended to cover or include the necessary repairing or replacing of any parts of the bridge," provided for by another clause in the same contract. Portage Lake Bridge Co. v. Wright, 78 Mich. 426, 431, 44 N. W. 498.

To "cease to be operated" referring, in an insurance policy, to a mill or manufactory, and indicating a condition of avoidance, means "something more than a temporary suspension. It must mean a closing with the intention of ceasing operation, not a shutting down for a few days or weeks because of the happening of events incident to the conducting of a mill in that locality, and which might be reasonably expected." Opportunity to be heard.—A lack of actual notice of a proceeding does not constitute a lack of "opportunity to be heard," when "a fit and proper time and place have been fixed, and notice thereof given which the law declares sufficient,—in short, if all the opportunity is given which the law provides for." In re Hause, 32 Minn. 155, 157, 19 N. W. 973. Accorded by statute to a defendant in disbarment proceedings, "opportunity to be heard" means "reasonable opportunity . . . to answer or otherwise plead. . . . 'Opportunity' means, 'fit or convenient time; a time or place favorable for executing a purpose; a suitable occasion.' (Webster.) "Opposing party" within a provision that a county court is always open for the transaction of business for which no notice is required to be given to an opposing party means an active litigant. Such is the meaning obviously intended by the opinion in Brown v. Snell, 57 N. Y. 286, 300, 301, 305, holding that a guardian in a case where the infant was a ward of court and the guardian an officer of the court was not included in the term, and where it is said: "This section of the Code does not refer merely to an opposite party, but to an opposing party. There must be a contest, a litigation to bring this clause into operation. It points to a well recognized distinction between contested and non-contested business." Reynolds, C., dissenting, remarked that he thought an "opposing party" was "not necessarily one who, when summoned into court, must come attended with martial music or any warlike preparations." That "the question does not at all depend upon how disagreeable a person may make himself when he is once fairly in court, or how much or little contention may thereafter ensue."

4. Construed as "To Wit," or Other Like Phrase, When Used to Distribute, Merely, Words. The alternative need not be of fact, and the word "or" is often used to express an alternative of terms, definitions or explanations of the same thing in different words,[11] introducing a synonym for,[12] or an explanation of, the preceding term;[13] in which case it has been held equivalent to "to-wit";[14]

8. "Wife or daughters" by way of answer to a question upon an application for insurance of relationship of persons to whom insurance was payable means in substance "The person or persons to whom it is payable are my wife or my daughters," that is, "to his widow or, if he left no widow, to his surviving daughters." Addison v. New England Commercial Travellers' Assoc., 144 Mass. 591, 593, 12 N. E. 407.

9. As in a direction that income "be applied by the proper authorities for the purchase of books for the Young Men's Institute, or any public library which," etc. (New Haven Young Men's Inst. v. New Haven, 60 Conn. 32, 36, 39, 22 Atl. 447); a power to sell "all or any," etc. (Condit v. Bigalow, 64 N. J. Eq. 504, 507, 54 Atl. 160). Where the power is given by statute to do two things connected by "or," it may "be used in such a sense as indicating that the power is to do one only of two things; but quite as frequently the use of the word 'or' denotes that the power granted is to do either; that is to say, both." Pollock v. Laura, 5 Fed. 133, 137. But compare Den v. Young, 23 N. J. L. 478, 483, where, in a power to sell or dispose of and divide "or" was held equivalent to "and."

Discretionary, as distinguished from substitutional, use.— In a power of appointment to all or any or either of three sisters named, "or" to all or any or either of their lawful issue, the word "or" following the names of the sisters "was apparently used in a discretionary rather than a substitutional sense." 10. Thus, in construing a provision for the recording of chattel mortgages, it was said: "The disjunctive conjunction 'or' is here used in its ordinary and generally accepted sense; it expresses the alternative, and gives to the mortgagee his choice of depositing the mortgage either in the county where the mortgaged property shall at the time be kept or in the county where the mortgagor shall at the time reside, if he be a resident of the state" (Springfield Third Nat. Bank v. Bond, 64 Kan. 346, 349, 67 Pac. 818); the construction of "or" as "and" was refused when the effect would have been to require a seed-grain note to be filed in two places instead of one of two (Minnesota Agricultural Co. v. Northwestern Elevator Co., 58 Minn. 536, 539, 60 N. W. 671); and as to another statute in relation to filing chattel mortgages it was said: "The disjunctive conjunction 'or' as here used is purely and strictly alternative in its effect and expresses that a choice may be made of one of the two places in which the registration of a mortgage may be had" (Oxsheer v. Watt, 91 Tex. 402, 404, 44 S. W. 67). Change in a penal provision from "fine 'and' imprisonment" to "fine 'or' imprisonment" "tended to obviate controversy as to the range of discretion" (Carter v. McClaughry, 183 U. S. 365, 393, 22 S. Ct. 181, 46 L. ed. 236).

6. In Negative Statement, Equivalent to "Nor." Following a negative, it has the same effect as "nor."[20]

7. Frequent Attacks Upon Disjunctive Construction. The proper alternative or disjunctive meaning is often attacked, even where it would seem to be obvious and can be upheld without hesitation by the courts,[21] for the word is not always employed disjunctively.[22]

There it was claimed that the latter bequest included only stocks [that is to say, in effect, though not in the language of the report, that the descriptive alternative introduced by "or" and corresponding to or explaining "the rest" was the whole phrase "nine tenths of my available stocks"]. But it was pointed out, by the court, that such construction would produce an intestacy as to property other than stocks, and held that the bequest included the rest of the whole estate, except certain unavailable stocks, to exclude which, the words "of my available stocks" were intended, and that "or" was not to be construed as "consisting of" [that is, in grammatical effect and not in the language of the opinion, the true alternative description, introduced by "or" to explain "the rest" was, simply, "nine tenths," referring to that remaining fraction of the whole estate]. Disjunctive and other uses distinguished.— In rejecting, as being in the alternative, an affidavit for attachment stating that defendant "is about to transfer, or secrete, or has transferred or secreted, his property," it was said: "It is true, as is contended by the appellant, that the conjunction 'or' is not always disjunctive in its signification. There are familiar instances given in the law books, in which the conjunction 'or' is held to be equivalent in meaning to the copulative conjunction 'and'; and such meaning is often given to the word 'or' in deeds, and in wills, for the purpose of carrying out the intention of the party. There are also cases in which the word 'or' may be permitted to retain its primary signification, as a disjunctive conjunction, and yet the use of it will not vitiate an affidavit for an attachment. There are cases where the word 'or' is used, in the statement of two or more phases of the same general fact, and not to connect two distinct facts. For illustration, where the statute says that, if the debtor 'absconds or secretes himself,' so that process cannot be served on him, an attachment may issue: here, the general fact (so to speak) is, that the party cannot be found by the officer, so that process may be served. This may be either because he has absconded, or because he secretes himself." But to

4. Between Names of Promisees: Dubious Construction. It has been construed "and" when used between the names of two promisees,[32] a construction which seems open to doubt.[33]

5. Said to Be Synonymous With "And." It has been said that "or" and "and" are sometimes synonymous[34] or convertible;[35] that in such a case, "or" is used in its copulative, and not in its disjunctive, sense.[36]

8. Strict Construction in Penal Statutes. In penal statutes "or" cannot be interpreted "and" when the effect would be to aggravate the offense or increase the punishment;[42] but this rule does not extend to the admission of the conjunctive construction where the word is used between the descriptions of different offenses.[43]

40. "The word 'or' is sometimes made to signify 'and,' when it appears to be consistent with the meaning implied by the context and in order to carry out the manifest intent of the contracting parties," but not where such interpretation "would be inconsistent with any intent which can reasonably be gathered from the connection in which the word is used, from the whole contract, or from the light of the surrounding circumstances." 43. So under a statute providing for a penal action if any one shall cut down, carry away "or" destroy trees, the disjunctive shows that either act, separately, constitutes the offense (Givens v. Kendrick, 15 Ala. 648, 651); under a statute declaring it a crime to advise, plot, or consult for a certain purpose, to "advise" is one offense, to "consult," another, to "plot," a third (State v. McDonald, 4 Port. (Ala.) 449, 460); a statute declaring it a misdemeanor to keep, or exhibit for use, a billiard table, makes a separate offense of either of the two acts named (Germania v. State, 7 Md. 1, 6); a statute providing for the punishment of any who shall "assault by willfully shooting at" him or "assault with intent to commit murder, rape, or robbery," describes thereby four distinct and separate crimes of which "willfully shooting at" another is one (State v. Fairbanks, 115 La. 457, 460, 39 So. 443; State v. Brady, 39 La. Ann. 687, 688, 2 So. 556); with reference to a provision for a forfeiture "if any minister . . . or justice . . . shall join any persons in marriage, without a certificate as aforesaid" (namely, that intention has been duly published) "or before such minister or justice is certified of the consent of the parents," etc., "if either party be a minor," it was urged in behalf of a defendant that "or," connecting the two clauses, "being taken in its appropriate disjunctive sense," the marriage might proceed upon either the certificate of intent or the consent of parents, without the other; but it was held that to perform a marriage with one and without the other constituted the offense, the disjunctive sense being taken to separate, not the descriptions of the two prerequisites to performance of the ceremony, but the two clauses describing the two offenses of performing it, on the one hand, without certificate of publication of intent, or, on the other hand, without being certified of the consent of parents, etc. (Ellis v. Hull, 2 Aik. In charging an offense under a statute which makes it a crime to do any of certain things therein mentioned disjunctively, the use of the word "or" between the words descriptive of those things is not, as a rule, permissible, but this rule does not apply where "or" in the statute is used in the sense of "to wit," that is, to introduce an explanation or synonym of the preceding term, in which case the words of the statute may be adopted. Mandatory quality said not to depend on form.— "A rude 'request' may be more mandatory in its form than a courteous 'order.'" Evans v. State, 8 Ohio St. 196, 199, 70 Am. Dec. 98.

60. "The word 'order,' is in daily use all over the land, and its meaning well understood. We send 'orders' to tradesmen, by our children, servants and neighbors, and through the mails, for merchandise, without ever supposing for a moment, that we possess the power to compel their compliance. It is a mere 'request,' and nothing more." Hoskins v. State, 11 Ga. 92, 102.

In the trade of book-canvassing, the term, applied to requests to purchase books, as the basis of an agent's commission, has, as explained by testimony, a certain, settled meaning, namely, an "order that proves good." Newhall v. Appleton, 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. 343, 345, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 306. [The text of the reports of this case omits the witness' statement describing what was meant by a "good order," and supply its place by "etc.," but, according to the "syllabus" of the report in 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. 343, 345, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 306, that phrase signified "that the orders should be bona fide signatures unconditionally for the complete work, and should prove good by the delivery of from one-quarter to one-third of the whole number of parts to, and the payment therefor by the subscribers."]

Necessity of writing.— Expressing a statutory requirement, the term may demand a writing (Cricket v. State, 18 Ohio St. 9, 23); but, when inartificially used, may be satisfied by a verbal expression (Treat v. Stanton, 14 Conn. 445, 456).

I. DEFINITION.

In the practice of courts the term "order" means a decision made during the progress of the case, either prior or subsequent to final judgment, settling some point of practice or some question collateral to the main issue presented by the pleadings and necessary to be disposed of before such issue can be passed upon by the court, or necessary to be determined in carrying into execution the final judgment.[1]

II. FORM AND REQUISITES.

A. In General. Where an order expresses the clear intent of the law in regard to the matter to which it relates, it is not void because the precise language of the statute is not employed.[2]

B. Caption — 1. JUDGE'S ORDER. The body of the order may be looked into for the purpose of determining whether it was made by a court or a judge.[3] It follows that a judge's order is not vitiated,[4] or made an order of the court,[5] because it contains a caption reciting the time, place, and term of court at which it was entered, which is required only of court orders.

2. ORDER OF COURT — a. In General. The caption of an order of court must truly state when and where the order was made.[6]

b. Effect of Absence of Caption. While an order of the court should be styled as such, and not as an order of the justice directing its entry,[7] yet when it appears from the notice of motion and the body of the order that it was made by the court, the absence of a caption does not prevent the order from being regarded as one made by the court.[8]

Other definitions are: "The judgment, or conclusion of the Court, upon any motion or proceeding." Gilman v. Contra Costa County, 8 Cal. 52, 57, 68 Am. Dec. 290.
"Any direction of a court, other than a judgment or decree, made in a cause." Anderson L. Dict.
"A direction in writing, granted by a court or judge, requiring or authorizing some act to be done." Burrill L. Dict.
Statutory definition is, "Every direction of a court or judge made or entered in writing and not included in a judgment." Dahlstrom v. Portland Min. Co., 12 Ida. 87, 85 Pac. 916, 917; De Lendrecie v. Peck, 1 N. D. 422, 423, 48 N. W. 322.

If an order which is required to be made by the court is entitled and filed in the court and bears the seal of the court, it will not be considered as an order of the judge at chambers, because the words "it appearing to me" are used in it, and the testatum clause says, "In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand." Oaks v. Rodgers, 48 Cal. 197.

8. Lawson v. Speer, 91 N. Y. App. Div.

c. Presumption Arising From Regular Caption. An order of court, with a regular caption, is presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, to have been made at a term of court regularly called and held.[9]

C. Recitals — 1. As to Preliminary Objections. While preliminary or other formal objections taken upon the argument should ordinarily be recited in an order for purposes of review, an omission of such a recital is not fatal to the order if it appears that the party complaining is in no wise aggrieved thereby.[10]

2. As to Papers Used. When a rule of practice requires that all the papers used or read on the motion shall be specified in the order, the recital must be so definite and certain as to enable the court to determine what papers were before and considered by it on the hearing.[11]

3. As to Waiver of Jurisdiction. If the question of jurisdiction is waived it should appear by recitals in the order or in a stipulation to that effect.[12]

4. Conclusiveness of. The rule is that recitals in an order, although not conclusive, are presumptive evidence of their truth.[13]

D. Signature of Judge. An order made in open court and entered by the clerk on his minutes is valid without a formal order signed by the judge.[14]

III. SETTLEMENT.

On settling an order a judge may lawfully modify or add to the decision announced by him.[15]

IV. ENTRY.

A. Generally — 1. Necessity — a. In General. Where an order is granted upon notice of motion to the adverse party, it does not become complete or effective for any purpose until entered.[16]

b. Within Given Time. Under a rule of practice, requiring an order granted upon a motion to be entered within a given period of time after the decision, such order is invalid and ineffectual unless so entered.[17]

2. Who Entitled. Where a motion is made to a justice out of term on notice,

Although the statute merely directs that an order shall be entered, and contains no provision nullifying it unless so entered, the order is nevertheless void unless entered. Blackwood v. Blackwood, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 47 S. W. 483 [affirmed in 92 Tex. 478, 49 S. W. 1045].

it is the duty of the prevailing party to see that an order conformably to the decision is entered.[18] And the rule in one jurisdiction at least is, that if the party, whose duty it is so to do, fails to enter an order within twenty-four hours after the decision is made, any party interested may enter it.[19]

3. Manner. The order made by a justice, on a motion made out of term upon notice, must be entered with the clerk of the county where the papers are filed.[20] An order is deemed to be entered, if formally prepared, signed by the judge, and filed with the clerk.[21]

4. Remedy For Irregular Entry. Where an order in favor of defendant is entered irregularly by plaintiff, the proper practice is for defendant to move to vacate plaintiff's order and substitute his own.[22]

B. Orders Nunc Pro Tunc — 1. In General. An order can be entered nunc pro tunc to make a record of what was previously done by the court, although not then entered;[23] but where the court has wholly omitted to make an order, which it might or ought to have made, it cannot afterward be entered nunc pro tunc.[24]

2. Foundation For. There are authorities which hold that an order nunc pro tunc can be entered on parol evidence if it is clear and sufficient.[25] But the view

Under the statute providing that the judge shall enter an order on the minutes, it is not necessary that the judge shall make the entry with his own hand, but it is sufficient if the order is entered on the minutes by the clerk at the direction of the judge, and the minutes subsequently approved and signed by him. State v. Walsh, 44 La. Ann. 1122, 11 So. 811.

Not entered on daily journal.— An order on a motion will be presumed to have been made in court, and not out of court, although not entered on the daily journal, where the judge appends to the motion in the motion docket the memoranda: "Granted. B. F. Graves, Cir. Judge," this practice being recognized as having long prevailed. Merrill v. Montgomery, 25 Mich. 73.

Effect of withdrawal of order.— Where an order is marked filed, and entered and recorded on the journal the day when made, but is immediately taken out of the clerk's possession by the attorney, and kept by him in his office, it is not on file while so kept. 3. Limitations. An application for the nunc pro tunc entry of an order is not barred by the statute of limitations.[27]

4. Laches. An order will not be entered nunc pro tunc, even in an otherwise proper case, if the delay in entering it was due to some fault or omission by the party entitled to enter the order.[28]

5. Effect of Entry. It is not within the purview of an order nunc pro tunc to operate ex post facto so as to give force to an order void for want of jurisdiction.[29]

V. SERVICE OF.

A. Necessity. In some jurisdictions the rule prevails that parties to a cause are chargeable with knowledge of all proper and legal orders made therein;[30] but in other jurisdictions the rule is that only the moving party is chargeable with notice of an order made in a cause,[31] and that such order must be served upon the adverse party in all cases where his rights may be affected or prejudiced by any proceedings taken under it.[32]

B. Sufficiency — 1. Copy or Original. Where the court renders a written decision requiring service of an order, the order must be entered and a copy thereof served,[33] unless the object be to bring the party into contempt, in which case the original order must be shown.[34]

2. As to Persons Upon Whom Service Made. Where an order granted in a cause does not require that it be personally served upon a party who has appeared by an attorney, service upon the attorney, instead of the party, is sufficient, unless the object is to bring the party into contempt.[35]

A defective copy of an order cannot be treated as a nullity, if its sense and object can be ascertained from its terms and the affidavit served. Osgoodby v. Seifert, 22 Alb. L. J. (N. Y.) 135.

Copy not certified.— Where a copy of an order of court has been served at the office of an attorney, he will not be justified in returning the same for the reason that it is not a certified copy. Gross v. Clark, 1 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 17.

Failure to recite paper used on motion.— Where a copy of an order of court has been served at the office of an attorney as directed therein, he will not be justified in returning the same for the reason that it does not recite a paper used on the motion. Gross v. Clark, 1 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 17.

Orders staying proceedings.— Although an order to stay proceedings with a view to a motion is not operative unless a notice of motion is also served (Lucas v. Albee, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 666; Rosevelt v. Fulton, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 438), yet, where such an order served upon a party recites that a motion is intended, and it is followed by a notice of motion served on his attorney the following day, the order will be held operative on the party from the time of service on him (Lucas v. Albee, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 666; Mallory v. East River Ins. Co., 7 Hill (N. Y.) 192).

When service sufficient.— Where a person employed to serve an order on an attorney delivered it to an individual found in charge of the attorney's office, the service was regular and effectual, although the attorney was in an adjacent room at the time. Gross v. Clark, 1 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 17. In case of a motion for an extension of the time for filing an answer, copies of the orders and affidavits are properly served by depositing them in the post-office, postpaid, properly addressed to plaintiff's attorney at his place of residence. Wallace v. Wallace, 13 Wis. 224.

When service insufficient.— Service of an

3. By Publication. Where the statute requires the publication of an order for a given period of time, and the order itself directs publication for a shorter period, publication for the period contemplated by the statute is sufficient.[36]

VI. AMENDMENT OF.

A. Orders Entered on Motion — 1. Power of Court. Every court has the power to amend its own order entered on motion, so as to express the meaning of the court at the time when the order was made,[37] provided the amendment be made without injustice, or on terms which preclude injustice.[38] But no court has power to amend its order so as to pass upon a question that was not actually presented to it, or as to which no ruling was made.[39]

2. Manner. When an order has been passed and entered, the proper practice for the party desiring its amendment is to make a motion on notice for that purpose,[40] which motion, in one jurisdiction at least, is denominated a motion for resettlement.[41] According to strictly regular practice a motion to amend an order, so as to express the meaning of the court at the time of the decision, should be made before the court or judge granting the order.[42]

3. Effect. Where an order is amended by leave of the court so as to make it bear date as of the day on which it should have been dated, such amendment does not render it necessary to reënter or re-serve the order.[43]

B. Orders Entered on Consent. Although an order by consent cannot be modified in any essential part without the assent of both parties to the same, yet the court on application of either party may give such further directions as shall be necessary to carry into effect the spirit and intent of the order.[44]

VII. VACATING AND SETTING ASIDE.

A. Jurisdiction or Authority — 1. Orders Entered on Motion — a. In General. The common-law rule is that the court has entire control over its own orders, and may vacate them at any time during the term at which they are made.[45]

Remedy by appeal.— Where an order denying a motion to resettle an order by adding recitals of certain papers, used on the motion pursuant to which it was made, fails to recite the papers used on the second motion, which are the same as those omitted from the first order, the remedy is by appeal from the second order and not by motion for its resettlement. Deutermann v. Pollock, 36 N. Y. App. Div. 522, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 829.

Grounds for resettlement.— A litigant cannot be deprived of his right to appeal by the arbitrary refusal of the court to resettle its order so as to show the fact that it was not made upon his default or consent. But in the absence of statutory authority,[46] it is beyond the power of the court to vacate its own order after the lapse of the term at which such order was made.[47] And it is not correct practice to ask one court to set aside an order made by another court of coördinate authority,[48] except where the order has been obtained by collusion,[49] or there is an absence of jurisdiction in the tribunal directing the order.[50]

b. By Default. An order taken by default after notice of motion may be vacated by the court granting the same, upon sufficient excuse being shown for the default.[51]

2. Ex Parte Orders — a. In General. Where a judge or officer has granted an order ex parte, no other judge or officer can set it aside.[52] That can only be done by the court,[53] or the judge or officer who made the order.[54]

b. By Consent. Parties acquire rights to the benefits of consent orders; and an order made by consent can never be vacated without the consent of all the parties, unless it affirmatively appears that its rendition was procured by fraud,[55] or mutual mistake,[56] the two essential prerequisites to the exercise of the power to annul or vacate such an order.

B. Proceedings For — 1. Notice — a. Necessity. As a matter of regular practice notice should be given of a motion to vacate an order.[57] But where according to the ordinary course of proceedings cause cannot well be shown against the motion, or where the order is not conformable to the practice of the court, it may be revoked without notice.[58]

b. Consent Equivalent. The consent of counsel to an order rescinding a previous order is equivalent to notice of application therefor.[59]

2. Time. In some jurisdictions the time within which the proceedings to vacate an order must be commenced is fixed by statute,[60] and it cannot be extended by the fact that subsequent proceedings have been based on such order.[61] In the absence of statute fixing the time within which proceedings for the vacation of an order must be commenced, such proceedings, if not commenced within a reasonable time after the entry of the order, will not be entertained because of laches.[62]

3. At Whose Instance. In a proper case the court may, of its own motion,[63] or on the application of a party interested,[64] vacate or set aside an erroneous order.

4. Grounds. That an order was made without jurisdiction and therefore void is ground for setting it aside;[65] but it is discretionary with the court to grant that relief, or to leave the party to set up the invalidity of the order whenever an attempt shall be made to enforce it against him, or to obtain a benefit thereunder.[66] That an order is irregular, because made without notice to the adverse party, is sufficient ground for setting it aside.[67]

5. Relief Awarded. Where a motion, made to vacate and set aside an order, also contains an alternative prayer for general relief, the court may modify the order in question.[68]

C. Operation and Effect. Where the court, in the exercise of its discretion, directs an order previously made by it to be stricken out, it is the same as if such order had never existed.[69]

D. Reinstatement of Orders Vacating — 1. Power of Court. An order vacating a formal order may itself be vacated at the same term if the parties are still before the court, in which case the original order is reinstated.[70]

2. Effect. If a judge at chambers makes an order which he has no power to make, and afterward sets the order aside, and then at chambers by a subsequent order, reinstates the first order, the order reinstating is also without authority and void.[71]

VIII. COLLATERAL ATTACK.

An order which is merely erroneous, and not void, cannot be questioned in a collateral attack on the proceedings which resulted in the order.[72] But where it appears on the face of the record that an order is void for want of jurisdiction over the subject-matter, it may be collaterally attacked by any person who is not, for any reason, estopped from questioning its validity.[73]

IX. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

A. Construction. The court speaks by its order, and effect must be given to it according to its terms.[74] The order cannot be qualified in its operation and effect by reference to the opinion of the court granting it,[75] unless the order expresses the ground on which it was based and such expression is coupled with phrases that make doubt.[76]

B. Operation — 1. Generally — a. Retrospective and Prospective. An order made in pursuance of a decision on a motion relates back and operates as of the date when the decision was made;[77] and when it directs a thing to be done without regulating the time within which it must be performed, it continues to speak so long as the cause for making it exists and the thing directed remains unperformed.[78]

b. Conclusiveness of Adjudication — (I) In General. The familiar doctrine of res adjudicata, or the rule as to the conclusiveness of an adjudication, is not applicable generally to the decision of a motion in the course of practice,[79] except, perhaps, as to any other application on the same state of facts for a similar order and for similar relief.[80]

(II) Recitals. Recitals in an order, although not conclusive, are presumptive evidence of their truth, and when uncontradicted are conclusive.[81]

(III) Persons Concluded—(A) Parties Benefited. The parties to a suit, who have availed themselves of the benefit granted to them by an order therein, are bound by it,[82] and cannot be heard to complain of conditions imposed by it.[83]

(B) Strangers. An order of court does not conclude persons who are not parties or privies to the proceedings.[84]

2. Irregular or Fraudulent Orders. An order irregularly obtained,[85] or obtained by fraud,[86] is operative until vacated.

3. Void Orders. A void order is not made valid by lapse of time and ever remains without effect as completely as if never entered.[87]

X. ENFORCEMENT.

Proceedings to enforce the performance of an order are proceedings in the action in which the order is made, and all the papers are entitled in the action.[88]

ORDINARILY. Commonly, usually.[1]

ORDINARY. As an adjective, established, regular, common, usual;[2] common, usual, often recurring;[3] methodical, regular, according to established order;[4] established, settled, accustomed, conforming to general order;[5] that which has been established, and is customary;[6] and sometimes used in the sense of fair; reasonable.[7] As a noun, a judicial officer;[8] a tavern;[9] a place of eating, where the prices are settled.[10] When used in connection with other words the phrases have often received judicial interpretation, for example the following: "Ordinary baggage;"[11] "ordinary business;"[12] "ordinary business

1. See Shaw v. State, 34 Tex. Cr. 435, 443, 31 S. W. 361, where the court gave as the definition of "ordinarily" Webster's definition of ordinary, that is, "According to established order; methodical; regular; customary, as the ordinary forms of law or justice; common, usual," but in application used "commonly, usually" as synonyms for "ordinarily."

Erroneously quoted, in the sentence: "The word 'ordinarily' means specific sums paid annually, or at other stated periods, for the right to use a patented device, whether it is used much or little or not at all." The quotation marks that distinguish "ordinarily" are obviously a misprint — the definition is that of "rentals" for patent devices. See Western Union Tel. Co. v. American Bell Tel. In the congregational church.— The "essential virtue and public benefit of an ordination" is "nothing but setting apart, installing or inaugurating, one who has been chosen to the office, and tendering to him the fellowship of the churches who assist in the ceremony. It will not now be contended that any spiritual or temporal power is conferred by the imposition of hands. Ordination, according to the Platform, is nothing else but the solemn putting a man into his place and office in the church, whereunto he had a right before by election; being like the installation of a magistrate in the commonwealth. 'Ordination is therefore not to go before, but to follow election.' Again; — 'Ordination doth not constitute an officer, nor give him the essentials of his office.' Cambridge Platform, ch. IX — Sec. 2. It is true, that the election here spoken of is an election by the church; but whenever, by change of law or usage, the right of election come to the congregation, the principles in regard to ordination are applicable." So the congregation may ordain. "And the Cambridge Platform recognizes the principle; for in sec. 4, ch. 9, it is said, if the people may elect officers, which is the greater, and wherein the substance of the office doth consist, they may much more (need so requiring) impose hands in ordination, which is the less, and but the accomplishment of the other." taining to the beginning or origin, the first or primitive form of a thing;[84] pertaining to the origin or beginning; initial; primal; first in order; preceding all others.[85] Phrases in which this term is employed have often received judicial interpretation; for example see the following: "Original amount in controversy;"[86] "original attachment;"[87] "original bill;"[88] "original capital stock;"[89] "original construction;"[90] "original contract;"[91] "original contractor;"[92] "original cost;"[93] "original inventor;"[94] "original location;"[95] "original machine;"[96]

It is to be noted that the punctuation adopted in the text is that of the Pennsylvania case above cited. In the Nebraska case, a semicolon appears after the word "origin," the effect of which would be to make the phrase "the first or primitive form of a thing," a complete definition or synonym, by itself. It would then define the "noun" original, instead of the "adjective," to which the opinion relates. By the use of the comma, the phrase does not lose its connection with "pertaining to," and so constitutes an adjective synonym, that is, "pertaining to the first or primitive form of a thing."

"Duplicate" has the same legal effect as "original" when stamped upon a bill of lading. Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Heidenheimer, 82 Tex. 195, 200, 17 S. W. 608, 27 Am. St. Rep. 861. See DUPLICATE, 14 Cyc. 1122.

When the "origin" to which the term refers is in doubt, that is, when the word may have reference to any one of several conditions previously existing and each capable of being described as the "origin" of some part of the history of the thing described as "original" or phase of the transaction with relation to which it is so called. The courts solve such doubt by considering the application of the adjective with reference to the circumstances of the particular case. See for example Foster v. McGraw, 64 Pa. St. 464, 467, 469. 10. Webster Int. Dict.

"Originally commenced in a court," with a designation of the class of court to which it has reference, applies to an action commenced in such a court but discontinued there and heard in a court of another class (Camacho v. Hamilton Banknote Engraving, etc., Co., 158 N. Y. 663, 52 N. E. 1123; Sidwell v. Greig, 157 N. Y. 30, 32, 51 N. E. 267; La Rue v. Smith, 153 N. Y. 428, 431, 47 N. E. 796; Cook v. Nellis, 18 N. Y. 126, 127; Brown v. Brown, 6 N. Suppl. 353), even when improperly dismissed by the lower court, when plaintiff acquiesces in such dismissal (La Rue v. Smith, 153 N. Y. 428, 431, 47 N. E. 796), or although the record fails to show the identity of the action discontinued and the action recommenced (Pugsley v. Kesselburgh, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 402).

"Originally exceeding," as used in statutes prescribing a certain amount as a jurisdictional requisite, do not exclude a debt reduced, by subsequent payments, below the prescribed amount, which it originally exceeded (Elsely v. Kirby, 1 Dowl. P. C. N. S. 946, 950, 12 L. J. Exch. 96, 9 M. & W. 536), but do exclude the balance of an account upon which an excess of the sum prescribed has never at any one time been due, although the total of its items exceed such amount (Pope v. Banyard, 3 M. & W. 424).

"Originally granted" does not apply to administration when the latter is auxiliary. So held under a statute providing that "administration shall not be originally granted

See also supra, definitions given in the text, in which minority is treated as an essential.

Held to designate "a minor whose parents are dead" when used in a statute relating to "any guardian, executor, or administrator, chargeable with the estate of any 'orphan' or deceased person" see Ragland v. Justices Inferior Ct., 10 Ga. 65, 70, 71.

Used interchangeably with "minors" in a statute conferring on probate courts jurisdiction to appoint guardians, in passing which statute it was to be presumed that the legislature acted with knowledge of the established custom, of courts charged with orphans' business, to appoint guardians for minors whose fathers were living. The term affords the suggestion of a charity, and was held to have been used with the intent to do so by one who collected money, ostensibly for an alleged "orphanage," the court remarking, "Lexicographers are not unanimous, but lean toward a meaning for 'orphanage' or 'orphan asylum' suggesting destitution of those relieved, rather than a profit-seeking enterprise." the language occurs;[54] or the intent with which it is used.[55] It must always mark a difference between that which it qualifies or represents and such antecedent;[56] where the antecedent has a double meaning, it is to be considered from which of those meanings the word marks a distinction;[57] and where the word and its antecedent stand apart in separate and different provisions, that which the antecedent expresses is excluded thereby from the effect of the provision in which "other" occurs.[58] The word, with those which it qualifies, may limit the meaning of its antecedent,[59] or the contrary.[60]

D. Scope. The scope of the word and of those which it qualifies is often limited to that which is of the same kind as its antecedent, by the principle "ejusdem generis," [61] in statutes or other documents;[62] but "ejusdem generis" does not apply where the contrary intent is clear;[63] as where such construction would con-

55. Niles v. Almy, 161 Mass. 29, 30, 36 N. E. 582, in a will.

56. Smith v. Ellington, 14 Ga. 379, 383.

57. Welch v. Seymour, 28 Conn. 387, 391, holding that in a provision to the effect that "officers" shall hold over until "others" be elected in their stead, the word does not necessarily mean "other persons" but "successors" in office, whether the same persons or not.

58. For example when one section of a statute contained mention of a certain class of cases and a provision concerning them, and the succeeding section, containing a different provision, began with the words, "In all other cases," the use of the words last quoted excluded, from the operation of the latter section, the class of cases specified in the former. So held in People v. Connors, 13 Misc. (N. Y.) 582, 586, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 472.

59. Thus, in the phrase, "for the celebration of holidays, and for other public purposes," the word implies that the celebration of holidays is a public purpose within the meaning of the act in which it occurs (Hubbard v. Taunton, 140 Mass. 467, 468, 5 N. E. 157); in construing a city charter which conferred authority to establish markets and other public buildings it was said: "The use of the word 'other' shows that markets was used in a restricted sense, to designate public buildings erected and devoted to the use of receiving, for sale and purchase, such marketable articles for daily use and consumption as might be wanted to supply the inhabitants of the city" (St. Paul v. Traeger, 25 Minn. 248, 253, 33 Am. Rep. 462); and, in the phrase, "other unappropriated lands," the word was held to import that lands previously mentioned were also unappropriated (Alexander v. Greenup, 1 Munf. (Va.) 134, 144, 4 Am. Dec. 541).

60. Thus, in construing the phrase, "larceny or any other felony," it was held that, larceny being either a felony or misdemeanor, the words "any other felony" were used not to limit the preceding larceny to such as amounts to felony, but to add felonies other than larceny to the category of crimes, the intent to commit which is an element of burglary. 62. Rhone v. Loomis, 74 Minn. 200, 204, 77 N. W. 31, where it is said that where a statute or document specifically enumerates several classes of persons or things, and immediately following and classed with such enumeration, the clause embraces "'other' persons or things, the word 'other' will generally be read as 'other such like,' so that persons or things therein comprised may be read as ejusdem generis 'with' and not of a quality superior to, or different from, those specifically enumerated."

flict with the obvious purpose of the statute,[64] or other document construed;[65] or where the preceding description is exhaustive, so that there can be nothing more of the same kind.[66] The attempt has been made in certain cases to show that the application of the word was confined to things extant at the time of its use, but the contrary has been held.[67]

E. Comprehensive, Supplemental Use. The word, or the phrase containing it, may be added — to quote a most expressive judicial description — "as a sort of catch all,"[68] after a mention, or enumeration, to include all that has not been expressed therein, whether of the same kind,[69] or of any and every kind.[70] See OTHERWISE.)

OTHER INSURANCE. See FIRE INSURANCE; LIFE INSURANCE; and the Insurance Titles.

OTHERWISE. By other like means;[71] contrarily;[72] different from that to which it relates;[73] in a different manner; in another way, differently in other respects;[74] in a different manner; in any other way; or in any other ways; differently;[75] in a different manner or way; differently in other respects;[76] in a different manner; in different respects;[77] in some other like capacity.[78] (See OTHER.)

Illustrations.— In the phrase, "sanitary or other purposes" in a city charter, "'sanitary' embraces everything pertaining to the health of the inhabitants, and, if the words 'other purposes' have no other meaning, they are superfluous. They have a broader significance." Eyerman v. Blaksley, 78 Mo. 145, 151. In the phrase "or other purposes," following the words "religious, charitable or educational," the words "or other" cannot be "read 'other such' or 'other like' or 'other of the same kind,' for such a construction would make them mere surplusage and deprive the clause of meaning. If so construed, the words simply repeat the idea 'charitable' previously expressed. . . . The clause, looked at by itself, clearly expresses the intent to permit the trustees to devote the fund, if they choose to do so, to purposes other than those which are educational or religious or charitable." Hyde v. Hyde, 64 N. J. Eq. 6, 9, 10, 53 Atl. 593.

As between landlord and tenant.— Where tenants, by one covenant, agreed to pay outgoings in respect of the premises, and in another to pay a fair proportion of all costs or expenses which the lessors in respect of being the owners might be obliged to pay, it was held that the tenants need not pay the cost of providing facilities for escape in case of fire, required by a statute which cast the liability upon the owner, since, if such an expense were an outgoing (which was doubted, one of the judges inclining to the theory that the word meant "the ordinary charges been characterized by the courts as large in scope;[18] and with reference, always to context and circumstances, the term has been held to include expenditure for such things as abating a nuisance, under statutory notice from local authorities;[19] improvements in drainage, required by statute;[20] rent;[21] rates and outgoings which they knew would be imposed in respect to the premises"), the mention in the latter clause, of costs or expenses in respect of being the owner, as apportionable, showed that such were not included in the former clause. Arding v. Economic Printing, etc., Co., 79 L. T. Rep. N. S. 420, 421. Land tax and rent charge on title, for which, by statute, the tenant is made primarily liable, although he has the right, after paying them, to deduct the amounts from rent, are outgoings of the tenant, therefore when he covenants to pay rent "free from all outgoings" he deprives himself of the right to make such deduction. As between estate and legatee.—A devise in trust to pay income to a legatee after payment of all incidental expenses and outgoings did not necessarily require the deduction of an expenditure made by trustees for structural drainage works. In the absence of an application to the court prior to such expenditure, the question whether estate or income should bear it was within the discretion of the court, which charged it to capital, and it was said that capital should have borne it had such prior application been made. In re Thomas, [1900] 1 Ch. 319, 69 L. J. Ch. 198, 48 Wkly. Rep. 409. Under the devise of a leasehold "free of all outgoings," those due up to the death of the testator must be borne by the estate, the legatee takes subject to liability to pay subsequent rents and subsequently to perform the covenants. In re Taber, 51 L. J. Ch. 721, 724, 46 L. T. Rep. N. S. 805, 30 Wkly. Rep. 883.

In respect of what property.—A provision, in a contract for the sale of part of a tract of land, that "'all rates and other outgoings' should 'be adjusted as usual,'" was held to apply to "outgoings in respect of the property contracted to be purchased, not in respect of the larger property of which, in the hands of the vendors, it formed part . . . outgoings which would enure to the benefit of the purchaser when he became owner; not outgoings the benefit of which and the liability to which would be necessarily determined when once the purchase was completed." B. 116. Compare the two dicta, one in dissenting opinion of Brett, L. J., in Budd v. Marshall, 5 C. P. D. 481, 483, 485, 44 J. P. 584, 50 L. J. Q. B. 24, 42 L. T. Rep. N. S. 793, 29 Wkly. Rep. 148, that the word had been "held to be a word of the largest possible signification" and would, if added to the words "taxes, rates, duties and assessments," have enlarged the scope of the provision in which they occurred, and the other in the opinion of Bramwell, L. J. (of the majority) to the effect that the other words were equally comprehensive, and adding: "The word is an awkward one, and I do not know that it would make this case clearer."

"Outgoings of every description payable by landlord or tenant in respect of the premises." That he could conceive no larger words than these was said by Kay, J., in Batchelor v. Bigger, 60 L. T. Rep. N. S. 416, 417.

I. TERMINOLOGY.

A. Pardon. A pardon is an act of grace proceeding from the power intrusted with the execution of the laws which exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for a crime he has committed.[1]

Conditional pardon defined see infra, I, C.

The power to grant pardons carries with it the power to make the pardon full, partial, or conditional. Carr v. State, 19 Tex. App. 635, 53 Am. Rep. 395.

5. Webster Dict. [quoted in State v. Eby, 170 Mo. 497, 523, 71 S. W. 52]. See also AMNESTY, 2 Cyc. 284.

Amnesty is a general pardon granted to those guilty of some crime or offense. Worcester Dict. [quoted in State v. Eby, 170 Mo. 497, 523, 71 S. W. 52].

Amnesty is a sovereign act of pardon and forgetfulness for past acts of a criminal nature. Black L. Dict. [quoted in In re Briggs, 135 N. C. 118, 145, 47 S. E. 403].

Compared with and distinguished from "pardon."— The word "pardon" in its generic sense embracing every character of pardon, includes amnesty. State v. Eby, 170 Mo. 497, 523, 71 S. W. 52; Davies v. McKeeby, 5 Nev. 369, 373. Pardon and amnesty are not, however, precisely the same. State v. Eby, supra. Pardons are granted to individual criminals by name; amnesty to classes of offenders or communities. They differ not in kind, but solely in the number they severally affect. Davies v. McKeeby, supra; U. S. v. Hall, 53 Fed. 352, 354. Amnesty is at least coextensive in its meaning with the word "pardon" so far as its effect is concerned, because it effaces or wipes out the offense which has been committed. In re Briggs, 135 N. C. 118, 145, 47 S. E. 403. In the United States the word "pardon" includes amnesty. State v. Eby, supra. See also AMNESTY, 2 Cyc. 284 note 4.

Power to grant.— The constitutional power of the president to pardon includes the power to grant amnesty. Davies v. McKeeby, 5 Nev. 369, 373.

C. Conditional Pardon. A pardon is conditional where it does not become operative until the grantee has performed some specified act, or where it becomes void when some specified event transpires.[6]

D. Commutation. Commutation of sentence or punishment is the change of a punishment to which a person has been condemned to a less severe one.[7]

E. Reprieve. A reprieve is the withdrawing of a sentence for an interval of time whereby the execution is suspended.[8] Reprieves have been classified as being of three kinds: (1) Ex mandatio regis;[9] (2) ex arbitrio judicis;[10] and

An indefinite suspension of the sentence of a prisoner, on conditions, amounts to a conditional pardon. State v. Hunter, 124 Iowa 569, 100 N. W. 510, 104 Am. St. Rep. 361.

Form of pardon with conditions is set out in Arthur v. Craig, 48 Iowa 264, 265, 30 Am. Rep. 395.

Distinguished from commutation of punishment.— There is a material distinction between a conditional pardon and a mere commutation of punishment. A conditional pardon is a grant to the validity of which acceptance is essential. It may be rejected by the convict; and if rejected there is no power to force it upon him. A commutation is the substitution of a less for a greater punishment by authority of law and may be imposed upon the convict without his acceptance and against his consent. Lee v. Murphy, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 789, 12 Am. Rep. 563.

F. Parole. A parole is a form of conditional pardon,[12] by which the convict is released before the expiration of his term, to remain subject, during the remainder thereof, to supervision by the public authority and to return to imprisonment on violation of the condition of the parole.[13]

II. NATURE, GROUND, AND EXTENT OF POWER TO PARDON.

A. Offenses Subject to Pardon. A pardon extends to every offense known to the law.[14] But under a constitutional provision giving the governor power to grant pardons for all offenses, the power extends only to offenses in violation of state laws.[15]

B. Authority to Pardon — 1. In England. The king may pardon any offense

ter judgment, if it be a small felony, though out of clergy, or in order to a pardon or transportation. The power of granting this respite belongs of common right to every tribunal which is invested with authority to award execution. The justices of assize may, by long practice, either grant arbitrary reprieves, or take them away, after the termination of their sessions; though this seems rather to stand on ancient usage than any express authority or recognized principle. 2 Hale 412; 1 Ch. Cr. L. 758, 759." Sterling v. Drake, 29 Ohio St. 457, 461, 23 Am. Rep. 762.

11. "There are some cases in which the judge is bound to reprieve. Thus: 1. When a woman is convicted either of treason or felony she may allege pregnancy of a quick child in delay of execution. 2. When a prisoner has become insane between the time of sentence and the time fixed for execution. 1 Chitty Cr. L. 761." Sterling v. Drake, 29 Ohio St. 457, 461, 23 Am. Rep. 762.

Conditional pardon defined see supra, I, C.

13. Cyclopedic L. Dict.

Distinguished from "commutation" in State v. Peters, 43 Ohio St. 629, 650, 4 N. E. 81; In re Conditional Discharge of Convicts, 73 Vt. 414, 426, 51 Atl. 10, 56 L. R. A. 658.

Distinguished from "pardon" in State v. Peters, 43 Ohio St. 629, 650, 4 N. E. 81, where it is said that a parole of a convict who remains in the legal custody and under the control of the prison board, and subject at any time to be taken back within the inclosure of the penitentiary — such board having full power to enforce such rules and regulations, and to retake and imprison any convict so on parole — is not a pardon. The prisoner is not discharged, nor is his term of service shortened, he only being allowed to go outside the building and inclosure of the penitentiary, and remaining in the legal custody and under the control of the board of managers of the penitentiary.

In military law a parole has been defined to be an agreement by a prisoner of war, upon being set at liberty, that he will not again take up arms against the government by whose forces he was captured, either for a limited period or while hostilities continue; also, as a promise given by a prisoner of war, when he has leave to depart from custody, that he will return at the time appointed unless discharged. The power of pardon is general and unqualified, reaching from the highest to the lowest offenses. The power of remission of fines, penalties, and forfeitures is also included in it. Story Const. § 1504 [quoted in U. S. v. Thomasson, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,479, 4 Biss. 336].

The power of pardon conferred by the constitution upon the president is unlimited, except in cases of impeachment. Ex p. Garland, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 333, 18 L. ed. 366.

15. State v. Renick, 157 Mo. 292, 57 S. W. 713, holding that the governor has no authority to remit the penalty imposed for violation of a city ordinance.

The power given to the governor to grant pardons does not authorize him to vacate an order disbarring an attorney at law for failure to pay money over to his client (Matter of Browne, 2 Colo. 553), nor to pardon one found guilty of bastardy (Ex p. Campion, (Nebr. 1907) 112 N. W. 585, 11 L. R. A. N. S. 865). Nor can he order a sheriff to release a prisoner committed to his custody by a judgment of court. Ex p. Campion, supra.

The president is not authorized to pardon for disobedience of a mandamus ordering certain county officers to levy taxes to pay a judgment recovered against the county. In re Nevitt, 117 Fed. 448, 54 C. C. A. 622.

whatever, whether against the common or statute law, so far as the public is concerned in it, after it is over.[16]

2. In United States. The constitution of the United States gives to the president the "Power to grant reprieves and Pardons for Offences against the United States, except in Cases of Impeachment."[17] By the constitutions of some of the states, the power of pardoning is vested in the governor alone; in others, the consent of the legislature is required;[18] and not infrequently the power of pardon is delegated to a board.[19] The pardoning power, whether exercised under the federal or state constitution, is the same in its nature and effect as that exercised by the representatives of the English crown in this country in colonial times.[20]

C. Nature of Power. The pardoning power is not naturally nor necessarily an executive function; and, where the constitution is silent, vests no more in one branch of the government than in the other.[21]

D. Ground For Exercise of Power. The power of pardoning is founded on considerations of the public good, and is to be exercised on the ground that the public welfare, which is the legitimate object of all punishment, will be as well promoted by a suspension as by an execution of the sentence.[22]

16. Bacon Abr. tit. "Pardon."

The power of pardoning offenses is inseparably incident to the crown; and this high prerogative the king is intrusted with upon a special confidence that he will spare those only whose case, could it be foreseen, the law itself may be presumed willing to have excepted out of its general rules, which the wisdom of man cannot possibly make so perfect as to suit every particular case. Bacon Abr. tit. "Pardon."

It seems that the king cannot wholly pardon a public nuisance while it continues such, because such pardon would take away the only means of compelling a redress of it. Bacon Abr. tit. "Pardon."

Anciently the right of pardoning offenses within certain districts was claimed by the lords of marches and others, who had jura regalia by ancient grants from the crown, or by prescription. Bacon Abr. tit. "Pardon."

17. U. S. Const. art. 2, § 2.

There can be no offense against the United States, except cases of impeachment over which the president has not an absolute pardoning power. U. S. v. Thomasson, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,479, 4 Biss. 336.

The president, under a grant to him of power to issue reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, has no power to relieve from imprisonment judges of a county court who have been committed for disobedience of a mandamus requiring them to levy a tax to pay a judgment against the county. In re Nevitt, 117 Fed. 448, 54 C. In Massachusetts, the governor, with the advice of the council, has the sole power of granting pardons, but he cannot have this power until after conviction. Com. v. Wheeler, 2 Mass. 172. The governor is not required, as a matter of law, on the presentation of a petition for pardon or for commutation of sentence to refer such petition to the executive council, or to submit the same to the council, unless the governor consider it his duty to exercise the pardoning power. In re Opinion of Justices, 190 Mass. 616, 78 N. 21. State v. Nichols, 26 Ark. 74, 7 Am. Rep. 600, holding that the power to pardon, after conviction, vested in the governor by the constitution, is not prohibitory of the exercise of that power by the legislature before conviction. See also U. S. v. Hall, 53 Fed. 352, holding that while pardons are usually granted by the executive, the pardoning power is by no means confined to that branch of government.

In England pardons by act of parliament were not infrequent, and they are placed on a higher level than the king's. U. S. v. Hall, 53 Fed. 352.

22. Cook v. Middlesex County, 26 N. J. L. 326, 331 [affirmed in 27 N. J. L. 637], where it is said: "Pardon implies guilt. If there be no guilt there is no ground for forgiveness. It is an appeal to executive clemency. It is asked as a matter of favor to the guilty. It is granted not of right but of grace. A party is acquitted on the ground of innocence, but is pardoned through favor."

A pardon proceeds not upon the theory of innocence, but implies guilt. It is granted not as a matter of right, but of grace. Roberts v. State, 160 N. Y. 217, 54 N. E. 678.

III. APPLICATION, ISSUANCE, REQUISITES, AND VALIDITY.

A. Application. The business of attending to applications for a pardon is not restricted to attorneys at law.[23] The justice of the sentence cannot be examined into and determined upon an application for pardon;[24] nor can the propriety of a conviction be questioned.[25] Upon a rehearing on an application for a pardon it is not mandatory upon the executive or other pardoning power to fix the case for trial and hear witnesses.[26]

B. Time of Granting Pardon. Unless restricted by the constitution,[27] the power to pardon may be exercised at any time after the commission of an offense, either before legal proceedings are taken, or during their pendency, or after conviction and judgment.[28] An offender may also be pardoned after he has suffered the punishment adjudged for his crime.[29]

C. Requisites of Pardon — 1. In General. No technical words or terms are

The ruling of the board of pardons upon an application for rehearing is not subject to revision by the judiciary. State v. Mehojovich, 119 La. 791, 44 So. 481.

27. Under a constitutional provision providing that the governor may grant pardons after conviction, a pardon granted after a verdict of guilty has been rendered and pending a hearing in the supreme court on a bill of exceptions, but prior to the entry of sentence on the verdict, is valid, since its acceptance by the accused admits the crime and waives the bill of exceptions and hence the verdict was a final conviction. People v. Marsh, 125 Mich. 410, 84 N. W. 472, 84 Am. St. Rep. 584, 51 L. R. A. 461. Compare State v. Alexander, 76 N. C. 231, 22 Am. Rep. 675, holding that a constitutional power to pardon offenses, after conviction, enables the governor to pardon after a verdict of guilty and sentence thereon, although the prisoner has taken an appeal not yet determined.

The word "offenses" being equivalent to "crimes" in the constitutional provision giving the power to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons, after convictions for all offenses, the government cannot pardon an offense until after conviction and judgment by the court. Ex p. Campion, (Nebr. 1907) 112 N. necessary to constitute a pardon.[30] If it is possible to show that the pardon was intended to cover and does cover the offense of which defendant was convicted, the pardon, if in other respects valid, is sufficient.[31] A proviso inserted in a deed of pardon that the disability annexed to the offense shall remain notwithstanding the pardon of the offense itself is void.[32]

2. Delivery and Acceptance — a. Necessity. A pardon is a deed to the validity of which delivery is essential,[33] and delivery is not complete without acceptance.[34]

b. Sufficiency of Delivery. Delivery of a pardon by the governor to one suing for the release of a prisoner is constructive delivery to the prisoner.[35]

Effect of acceptance.— Where one, pending appeal from a judgment of conviction, accepts the governor's pardon, he is not entitled to review that part of the judgment assessing a fine and costs against him, the acceptance of a pardon being an admission that he was rightly convicted. Manlove v. State, 153 Ind. 80, 53 N. E. 385.

35. Ex p. Reno, 66 Mo. 266, 27 Am. Rep. 337, where it was held that simple intention on the part of the executive to bestow a pardon confers no right and is perfectly nugatory until the intention may be said to be fully completed. This intention may be said to be fully completed when the pardon is signed by the executives, properly attested, authenticated by the great seal of the state and delivered either to the person who is the subject of the favor or to someone acting for him or on his behalf.

Delivery to person pardoned.— The fact that a pardon was delivered directly to the person pardoned does not affect its validity. Spafford v. Benzie Cir. Judge, 136 Mich. 25, 98 N. W. 741.

The delivery and acceptance of a pardon are complete when the grantor has parted with his entire control of dominion over the instrument, with the intention that it shall pass to the grantee, and the latter assents to it either by himself or agent. Rosson v. State, 23 Tex. App. 287, 4 S. W. 897.

Where a pardon was sent by the governor to the prosecuting attorney, and was by him used as a predicate for the examination of the pardoned criminal as a witness, and not then repudiated by the witness, but he exercised his right to testify by virtue of the pardon, a sufficient delivery and acceptance of the pardon were shown. Hunnicutt v. State, 18 Tex. App. 498, 51 Am. Rep. 330.

c. Presumption of Acceptance. An acceptance of a pardon will be presumed in the absence of any proof to the contrary.[36]

D. Fraud. A pardon procured by false and fraudulent representations is void,[37] and this is true even though the person pardoned had no part in perpetrating the fraud.[38]

E. Mistake of Fact. A mistake as to fact may render a pardon void.[39]

IV. CONSTRUCTION AND OPERATION.

A. Construction. A pardon should be construed most strictly against the state.[40]

B. Operation — 1. In General. When a full and absolute pardon is granted it exempts the individual upon whom it is bestowed from the punishment which the law inflicts for the crime which he has committed. The crime is forgiven and remitted, and the individual is relieved from all of its legal consequences.[41]

The effect of a full pardon is to make the offender a new man.[42] It blots out of existence the guilt so that in the eye of the law the offender is as innocent as if he had never committed the offense.[43]

2. Retrospective Operation. A pardon affords no relief to what has been suffered by the offender in his person by imprisonment, forced labor, or otherwise.[44]

3. Rights of Third Persons. A pardon does not affect any rights which have vested in others directly by execution of the judgment for the offense, or which have been acquired by others while that judgment was in force.[45] Thus a pardon cannot take away the right of an informer to his part of a fine or penalty fixed by the law upon the commission of the offense.[46]

4. OFFENSES COVERED. The recital of a specific distinct offense in a pardon limits its operation to that offense, and that pardon does not embrace any other offense for which separate penalties and punishment are prescribed.[47]

5. RELEASE FROM PAYMENT OF COSTS. A pardon cannot release defendant from the costs of the prosecution that accrued in favor of third persons as incident to the conviction, although it in terms purports to do so.[48]

6. RESTITUTION OF FINE. The granting of a general pardon to a party convicted, or a partial pardon, by remitting his fine, will not entitle the party to a restitution of the fine, or to indemnity for any part of the penalty which he may have paid or suffered.[49]

7. Restoration of Offices Forfeited. A pardon does not operate to restore offices forfeited.[50]

8. Time of Taking Effect. A pardon like a deed takes effect from its delivery.[51]

V. Revocation.

A pardon which is not void in its inception cannot be revoked for any cause after its delivery and acceptance are complete.[52]

VI. Commutation of Sentence and Reprieve.

A. Power to Commute. The general power to pardon necessarily contains in it the lesser power of remission and commutation. If the whole offense may be pardoned a fortiori, a part of the punishment may be remitted or the sentence commuted.[53]

B. Power to Reprieve. The power to pardon necessarily includes the power to reprieve.[54]

Where fine has not been paid.— The word "pardon" includes the idea of release; and a pardon by the governor of one convicted of conspiracy, even after sentence, will release all fines imposed for the offense, although these fines were due, not to the commonwealth but to the county. Cope v. Com., 28 Pa. St. 297. But when a defendant convicted of a misdemeanor is sentenced to pay a certain fine and to be imprisoned until the fine is discharged, a release by the governor from the imprisonment alone is not a release or satisfaction of the fine. State v. Richardson, 18 Ala. 109. Ministerial power.—The power to commute or shorten the term of imprisonment is a ministerial or administrative, not a judicial, power. Miller v. State, 149 Ind. 607, 49 N. E. 894, 40 L. R. A. 109.

C. Assent to Reprieve. The assent of a prisoner to a reprieve is not necessary.[55]

D. Effect of Reprieve. A reprieve does not annul the sentence, but merely delays or keeps back the execution of it for the time specified.[56]

VII. CONDITIONAL PARDON.

A. Power to Grant. The power to grant a pardon includes the power to grant a conditional pardon, the condition to be either precedent or subsequent.[57]

B. Nature of Condition. The condition may be of any nature, so long as it is not illegal, immoral, or impossible of performance.[58] Thus, among other con-cannot be exercised by the governor except in so far as it is expressly permitted by the constitution.

At common law the power to reprieve was lodged in the courts as the representatives of the king, he being considered the very fountain of justice, and he was never called upon to exercise it except in capital cases of necessity. State v. Hawk, 47 W. Va. 434, 34 S. E. 918. At common law a reprieve might be granted either by the king under his power to pardon, or by the court; and every court which had power to award execution had power to grant a reprieve. Clifford v. Heller, 63 N. J. L. 105, 42 Atl. 155, 57 L. R. A. 312.

Ministerial power.— The power to grant a reprieve is a ministerial or ministrative power, not a judicial power. Miller v. State, 149 Ind. 607, 49 N. E. 894, 40 L. R. A. 109.

In New Hampshire the power of pardon, granted by the constitution to the governor and council, does not include the power to reprieve; but the latter is vested in the governor alone, as chief executive magistrate. Ex p. Howard, 17 N. H. 545.

A pardon granted upon a condition which is illegal, immoral, or impossible to be performed, becomes an absolute pardon, as such a condition is void. See cases cited supra, this note.

59. Proper conditions.— The governor may annex to a pardon the conditions that the recipient shall refrain from the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage during the remainder of the term of sentence; that he shall use proper exertions for the support of his mother and sister; and that he shall not, during the same time, be convicted of any criminal offense in the state. The condition of a pardon that requires reimprisonment for the original sentence of imprisonment after the expiration of the particular period of time fixed by the court within which the sentence imposed should be executed is not immoral or impossible of performance during the life of the convict, nor is it illegal, since the particular period of time within which the sentence is to be suffered by the convict as specified in the sentence is not a part of the legal sentence, except so far as it fixes the quantum of time he must suffer such penalty. Banishment from United States.— A condition of banishment from the United States may be imposed on the granting of a pardon. People v. Potter, 1 Park. Cr. (N. Y.) 47.

To leave state forthwith.— Where a prisoner has been granted a pardon on condition that he forthwith leave the state and never return to it, he is not entitled to a discharge from rearrest on habeas corpus, it appearing that he did not accept the pardon in good faith, and that after his release from prison and before his rearrest ample opportunities were given him to leave the state, of which he did not avail himself. Ex p. Marks, 64 Cal. 29, 28 Pac. 109, 49 Am. Rep. 684.

History of banishment as a condition.— "Banishment was first known in England as abjuration, where the party accused fled to a sanctuary, confessed his crime, and took an oath to leave the kingdom and not return without permission (4 Bl. Com. 333; 3 P. Williams, 37). This was not as a punishment, but as a condition of pardon. After abjuration was abolished, and about the reign of Charles II, it became usual to grant pardons on condition of banishment, and that the original sentence should be revived on a violation of the stipulations of its remission (Kel. pre. 4; Williams, J. Felony, VI; 1 Ch. Cr. L. 789). And it was usual to bind the criminal as an apprentice, and both he and his master were liable to severe penalties on his return. Afterwards the performance of the stipulation of banishment was enforced by requiring security from him that he would leave the country; and finally the practice settled down to that adopted in this case, namely, that of granting pardons on condition, and enforcing the condition by inflicting the original sentence upon the party in case of violation." or that he shall be and remain a law-abiding citizen.[64] But no conditions can be attached to a pardon that are to extend after the expiration of the term for which the prisoner was sentenced.[65]

C. Acceptance. A conditional pardon is a grant to the validity of which acceptance is essential. It may be rejected by the convict; and if rejected there is no power to force it upon him.[66]

D. Fulfilment of Condition. Where a conditional pardon has been granted and accepted, and the convict has fulfilled the conditions thereof, the effect is the same as though the pardon were by its terms absolute.[67]

E. Breach of Condition — 1. In General. A breach of the condition of a pardon avoids and annuls the pardon.[68] Execution of the original sentence may then be enforced.[69]

64. Ex p. Houghton, (Oreg. 1907) 89 Pac. 801, 7 L. R. A. N. Comp. § 1572, providing that reprieves, commutations, and pardons may be granted by the governor upon such conditions and with such restrictions as he may think proper, the governor had authority in granting a pardon to impose such a condition.

2. As an Offense. At common law the non-performance of the conditions of a pardon is not an offense.[70]

3. Procedure on Breach. There is some conflict among the authorities as to the method of procedure to be pursued when a prisoner who has availed himself of a conditional pardon has been guilty of a breach of the conditions imposed. It has been held by some courts that there must be a judicial determination of the facts amounting to a breach of the condition.[71] It has been said, however, in other cases that the determination of the facts constituting a breach of condition need not be on indictment, nor on trial by jury.[72] And in some jurisdictions it has been held that the authority to determine whether the conditions of the pardon have been broken may be conferred upon the governor who can finally determine the question of fact and remand for further imprisonment without judicial proceedings.[73]

the state in two weeks, and she neglected to do so, the court will consider such pardon void after the two weeks, and upon motion of the prosecuting attorney will pass sentence upon her. State v. Fuller, 1 McCord (S. C.) 178.

See also Ex p. Alvarez, 50 Fla. 24, 39 So. 481, 111 Am. St. Rep. 102, holding that in the absence of statute, and unless the act constituting the violation of a condition of a pardon is itself a criminal offense, the violation of the condition is no ground for prosecution by indictment.

W. 310, 14 L. R. A. 285; People v. Moore, 62 Mich. 496, 29 N. W. 80; State v. Wolfer, 53 Minn. 135, 54 N. W. 1065, 39 Am. St. Rep. 582, 19 L. R. A. 783, holding that after a conditional pardon, if it is claimed that the person pardoned has not complied with the condition, he must be brought before the court to show cause why execution should not be awarded on his original sentence, and then the court has jurisdiction to inquire and determine whether he is the same person who has been pardoned, and if so, whether he has violated the condition of the pardon. See also People v. Burns, 77 Hun (N. Y.) 92, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 300 [affirmed in 143 N. Y. 665, 39 N. E. 21], holding that where a convict is charged with violating a conditional pardon, the question of fact is properly tried by a jury on return of an order to show cause why he should not be remanded to prison for such violation under his original sentence.

The established practice to test the question whether there has been a violation of the condition of a pardon, in the absence of statutory regulations, is for some court of general criminal jurisdiction, on having its attention called to the fact, to issue a rule reciting the conviction and sentence, the pardon and its conditions, and the alleged violation, and requiring the sheriff to arrest the convict and serve a copy of the rule on the convict, and, if the prisoner denies that he is the person who was convicted and sentenced and pardoned, he is entitled to a jury to try such issue, but all other facts and issues can be tried by the judge, and if the facts are found for the convict he should be discharged; otherwise he should be remanded to custody and ordered to have the original sentence imposed upon him duly executed. Ex p. Alvarez, 50 Fla. 24, 39 So. 481, 111 Am. St. Rep. 102. But where a convict, on violation of a conditional pardon, has been rearrested, on a hearing before a court of general jurisdiction, he is not entitled to a jury trial as a matter of right, except on the question as to whether he is the same person who was convicted. State v. Horne, 52 Fla. 125, 42 So. 388, 7 L. R. A. N. S. 719, 52 Fla. 143, 42 So. 714. Similarly where a conditional pardon provided that the governor might summarily determine whether the conditions had been complied with, and that, if he found they had not, he might revoke the pardon and order the reconfinement of the person pardoned without the intervention of any court, such stipulations became binding upon the person pardoned upon his acceptance of the pardon, and authorized his reconfinement as provided without a judicial determination as to whether the conditions of the pardon had been violated. Ex p. Houghton, (Oreg. 1907) 89 Pac. 801, 9 L. R. A. N. S. 737.

Insanity as cause for breach.—If a prisoner who has been pardoned on condition of leaving the country within a limited time does not depart and is afterward taken up for not so doing, he may, on its appearing to the court that he was insane, be discharged on condition of departing within the same period from the day of discharge. People v. James, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 57.

4. STATUS AFTER BREACH. Upon the revocation of a pardon for a breach of one of its conditions, the legal status of the person pardoned must be regarded the same as it was before the pardon was granted.[74]

VIII. PLEADING AND PROOF OF PARDON.

A. Pleading Pardon — 1. NECESSITY OF PLEADING. The court takes no notice of a pardon unless it is pleaded or in some way claimed by the person pardoned.[75]

2. MANNER OF PLEADING. There is no hard-and-fast rule as to how a pardon shall be brought to the attention of the court.[76] All that is requisite is that the attention of the court be called to the fact that a pardon has been granted.[77]

B. Proof of Pardon. The best evidence of a pardon is either the original or a certified copy.[78]

St. Rep. 361, holding that where an order suspending the sentence of a prisoner provided that the governor might revoke it at his pleasure, no determination of any fact is essential to the authority of the governor to terminate the suspension and cause the prisoner to be returned to the penitentiary.

74. State v. Horne, 52 Fla. 125, 42 So. 388, 7 L. R. A. N. S. 719, 52 Fla. 143, 42 So. 714; Arthur v. Craig, 48 Iowa 264, 30 Am. Rep. 395.

Period of reimprisonment.— Where a conditional pardon provides that on breach of the condition on which the pardon is granted it shall be the duty of any sheriff to immediately arrest the criminal and return him to the penitentiary to serve out the remainder of his term, the reference is to the length of imprisonment fixed by the sentence, and not to the particular period of time mentioned in the sentence during which it was to be executed, since the latter is not an effective part of the sentence. Time of pleading.—The plea of pardon may be made after conviction in response to the question whether the accused has anything to say why the sentence should not be pronounced. Blair v. Com., 25 Gratt. (Va.) 850. A pardon may even be called to the attention of the appellate court where the case is pending on appeal. Com. v. Lockwood, 109 Mass. 323, 12 Am. Rep. 699. A pardon may also be alleged as an answer to a return of habeas corpus. In re Edymoin, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 478.

Redd v. State, 65 Ark. 475, 47 S. W. 119. So, where the testimony of a witness convicted of felony is objected to, the testimony of a third person that he procured a pardon for such witness and had read the same and that it restored the witness to all the rights of citizenship is inadmissible as

I. THE RELATION IN GENERAL.

The term "parent and child" is used to indicate the relation existing between husband and wife, or either of them, on the one hand, and their legitimate offspring on the other.[1] The existence of the relation is a question of fact,[2] and is established prima facie where it is shown that the parties lived together, and recognized by their acts the existence of that relation.[3] The rights and obligations growing out of the relation do not necessarily continue until or terminate upon the child's attainment of majority,[4] but by the consent of the parties may be terminated before[5] or continue in full force after[6] such time; and indeed some of the Illegitimate child see BASTARDS.

2. See Neilson v. Ray, 17 N. Y. Suppl. 500 (evidence sufficient to establish relation of parent and child); In re Turnbull, 4 N. Y. Suppl. 607 (evidence warranting a finding that natural relation of parent and child did not exist).

rights and obligations growing out of the relation continue throughout the entire lives of the parties.[7] The right of a parent to the service and control of his child is subordinate to the right of the government to his services,[8] and may be enlarged, restrained, and limited as wisdom or policy may dictate, unless the legislative power is limited by some constitutional prohibition.[9] The child has the right, subject to such regulations as the parent may adopt, to use the family property in a careful and proper manner;[10] but the fact that the occupant of land is the son of the owner is not sufficient to raise the legal conclusion that it was to be held free of rent, although slight additional evidence might warrant such a conclusion.[11]

II. CUSTODY AND CONTROL OF CHILDREN.

A. Authority and Duty of Parents — 1. IN GENERAL. The authority which a parent has over a child is not limited, except that it must not be so exercised as to endanger the child's safety or morals,[12] and the law recognizes no distinctions of color or race in the parental relation, but all parents, whatever may be their standing in society, have precisely the same legal authority and control over their children.[13] While both parents are living, the father is bound to protect his children in their persons and rights,[14] and the house of the father being the proper residence of the family he may compel the children to remain there.[15] In the absence of the father, the mother may direct the child's conduct, residence, education, occupation, and associates,[16] and upon the death of the father it is the duty of the mother to exercise authority over her children,[17] and the children have no legal right to quit the mother's home without her consent.[18] While it is admitted to be a delicate thing for the court to interfere against paternal authority, it is well established that it may do so when it becomes necessary for the safety and protection of the child.[19]

Punishment of parent for cruelty.— Where a parent imprisoned his child, a blind and helpless boy, in a cold and damp cellar, without fire, during several days in midwinter, giving as an excuse that the boy was covered with vermin and had been anointed by the father with kerosene, this was needless cruelty, which rendered the father subject to indictment and punishment. The California statute provides for judicial cognizance of the abuse of parental authority and authorizes the courts when such abuse is shown to free the child from the parental dominion, while enforcing the duty of support and education, and in a proceeding under such statute the welfare of the child is the first consideration. See Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 124 Cal. 677, 57 Pac. 674, holding the evidence sufficient to show an abuse of parental authority.

2. Chastisement of Child.[20] Either parent[21] has the right to chastise the child for the punishment of faults or disobedience and the enforcement of parental authority,[22] but is amenable to a criminal law for the abuse of such right.[23] The authority of a parent to chastise the child may be delegated to another.[24]

3. Right of Access to Child. A parent who is a proper person is entitled, when the custody of the child is given to another person, to have access to and be allowed to visit or be visited by the child at reasonable times.[25] It is also proper that grandparents should be allowed to visit and be visited by the child,[26] and that where children of the same parents are given into the custody of different persons the children should be allowed to visit each other.[27] But access may be denied even to the parent where it would be detrimental to the child.[28]

4. Religious Education and Affiliations of Child. The general rule is that an infant is to be brought up in the religion of the father,[29] and an antenuptial agreement that the children shall be brought up in a different religion from that of the father is not binding at law or in equity;[30] although it will have weight with the court in considering whether the father has abandoned his right to educate his children in his own religion.[31] A father has a right to direct and regulate the religious faith in which his child shall be brought up,[32] provided the tenets of such religion do not inculcate violation of the laws of the land,[33] and the court will not interfere with the right unless there is an abuse of parental authority.[34] But a father has no right to control or interfere with the rights of conscience of his minor child who has arrived at the age of discretion,[35] and the court has jurisdiction to protect the conscientious convictions of a minor, although adverse to the religion or even to the declared wishes of a living father who has not forfeited his parental authority,[36] although such jurisdiction is only exercised with extreme caution.[37] The court has also jurisdiction to prevent parents preaching irreligious doctrines in the presence of their children.[38] If a father has forfeited or abandoned his right to have his children educated in his own religion, the court will consider only the happiness and benefit of the child.[39] And where a parent has surrendered the control, maintenance, and education of the child to the state as parens patriæ the parent is not entitled to prescribe its religious education or form of worship.[40]

Requisites and sufficiency of contract.—The right of a father to the custody of his child cannot be assigned or transferred by a parol agreement, but a father may by deed part with his parental rights to the custody of his infant child, although such deed is not in the form required by the statute for indentures of apprenticeship, and the child is consequently not bound. Agreement between parents.— Where the mother of a child voluntarily yields the control to the father, and he takes the child away with him, she cannot afterward resume the control without the assent of the father; no reason being shown why the father should not retain the custody of the child. Rep. 768 (holding that a letter written by a husband to the parents of his wife, at the time of his wife's death, stating that he intrusts his child to their custody for a certain time, did not constitute a contract divesting himself of the right to custody of the child); People v. Paschal, 68 Hun (N. The understanding of persons having temporary custody of a child that the father had given to them the right to permanent custody does not confer upon them that right, unless there was a corresponding understanding on the part of the father, so clearly shown as to be enforceable against him. 81. Miller v. Miller, 123 Iowa 165, 98 N. W. 631. See also Wishard v. Medaris, 34 Ind. 168, holding that an instrument by which a parent surrenders the child to an orphan's institution, specifying no particular time for which it shall be retained, is a mere temporary arrangement, and the parent may reclaim the child at any time.

One parent, even though entitled to the custody of the child as against the other parent, cannot, by testamentary disposition or otherwise, dispose of the custody of the child after his or her death so as to defeat the right of the surviving parent;[82] and it has been held that a wife living apart from her husband is entitled to the custody of the child as against a person in whose care the husband placed it.[83] But persons to whom parents have intrusted or surrendered the custody of their children are entitled to such custody as against third persons.[84] in some jurisdictions established by statute, that where a child is of tender age so as to require the care and attention that a mother is especially fitted to bestow upon it, the mother, rather than the father, is the proper custodian,[89] unless, of course, she is for some reason unfit for the trust;[90] and the fact that the infant, in addition to being of tender age, is sickly or delicate furnishes a still stronger reason for leaving it with the mother instead of the father.[91] Even a grandmother has been awarded the custody of a very young or delicate child as against the father, on the ground that she was better fitted to care for its wants.[92] The sex of the child may also be a question materially affecting the question of custody; a male child being more properly given to the father and a female to the mother.[93]

where the dispute is between the parents [95] or between third persons.[96] Where, however, the dispute is between the person legally entitled to the custody on the one hand, and a person having no legal right on the other, the mere preference of the child will not as a rule be allowed to prevail over the legal right,[97] although even in such case it may be considered on the question of welfare,[98] and in connection with other circumstances may outweigh the legal right.[99] Where the child is too young to choose with discretion, its preferences have little or no weight,[1] and in any event the welfare of the child is a consideration paramount to its preference.[2]

d. Competency, Character, and Conduct of Parent. In determining the question as to who should have the custody of the child it is proper that the character, competency, and conduct of the parents should be considered.[3] A parent may be deprived of or refused the custody of the children where his right has been relinquished [4] or forfeited,[5] as by abandonment or failure to provide for the child,[6]

court to obtain the custody, and upon its being shown that the parent has an illegal object in view in obtaining the custody.[18]

e. Financial Benefit or Detriment to Child. Where there is no objection to a child's remaining with his father, except that this would deprive him of the benefit of a legacy sufficient for his education and maintenance when away from the father, the court will not direct the child to be taken from the father without his consent and placed at school.[19]

f. Religious Convictions. The peculiar religious convictions of a father form no ground for removing the child from his custody,[20] nor does a father forfeit his right to custody of his child by being or becoming an atheist.[21] But where a father belongs to a sect which entertains opinions obnoxious to society, adverse to civilization, opposed to the usages of christendom, and in some respects contrary to the express commands of the bible, the court will not award him the custody of the child.[22] In determining the custody of a child as between persons other than parents the court regards its temporal welfare as paramount to questions of religious doctrine;[23] but the child will be delivered to the custody of persons of its father's faith if its temporal interests will be as well conserved by the custody of such persons as by that of others of a different faith or indifferent in religious matters.[24]

g. Intention to Remove Child From State. While the court might, in the interest of children, refuse to permit their removal or allow it only on terms,[25] it must be a very extreme or special case which would induce a court to interfere with the natural rights of a parent in this respect,[26] and ordinarily a father will not be refused the custody of his child because he intends to take it to another state.[27]

h. Present Possession of Child. As between the parents the actual possession of the child may have weight in determining the question of custody, for it has been said that the power to change the custody of the child between contending parents living apart is a delicate discretion not to be exercised except in cases in which its necessities clearly demand it, or where one or the other of the parties has obtained the custody by fraud, force, or strategy.[28]

i. Agreement of Parent Giving Custody to Another. Whether or not an agreement by a parent to give the custody of the child to a third person is legally binding,[29] it may be considered by the court in determining the question of custody as shedding light upon the relations of the parties and their feelings for the child and thus assisting the court in the exercise of its discretion,[30] and the court may well refuse to allow the parent to reclaim the child from those to whom it has been surrendered where the latter have had the custody for a considerable time and there has grown up a reciprocal affection between them and the child which should be respected and not interfered with by a forced separation which would not be for the child's welfare.[31] On the other hand such an agreement will not be enforced to the detriment of the child, but the court will take the child away from the person to whom the parent has surrendered it and restore the custody to the parent, where it clearly appears that such a course will be most beneficial to the child.[32]

another state are without power in the premises,[39] and cannot obtain jurisdiction for such purpose over persons temporarily within the state.[40] In England, however, it is held that the court of chancery has jurisdiction over the custody of children of an English subject, although such children were born and reside abroad.[41]

c. Parties.[42] A petition by a wife, after a voluntary separation from her husband, for custody of the children, should be filed in her own name and not by next friend,[43] and the mother of a child whose father is dead may sue for its custody without being joined by her present husband.[44]

d. Evidence[45]—(I) Presumptions and Burden of Proof. The existence of circumstances which would deprive the parent of the right to custody of the child, such as unfitness,[46] inability to care for it,[47] or relinquishment of the parental right of custody,[48] will not be presumed but must be proved by the person opposing the parent's right. So also it is presumed that the place selected by a father for the care and support of his children is suitable and a person claiming otherwise has the burden of proof.[49] But under a statute giving the custody of children to the mother, without a jury trial, if the father from drunkenness neglects to provide for them, it has been held that, where the drunkenness is satisfactorily shown and the father is without property, the burden is on him to show that he has performed his duty in providing for his family.[50] And where the wife has chosen to absent herself from the husband without giving any reason, the court will presume that none exists,[51] and the burden is on the wife to show that she did not desert the husband until after further living with him became intolerable through his tyranny, oppression, or abuse.[52]

(II) Admissibility. Evidence tending to show that the person claiming the custody is unfit or unable to care for the children is admissible,[53] and such person's moral character[54] or reputation[55] may be shown. Evidence is admissible as to the past treatment of the child by the person having the custody,[56] and as to

(III) Weight and Sufficiency. The general rules as to the weight and sufficiency of evidence[59] govern in respect to evidence introduced to support or defeat a claim to the custody of a child.[60]

e. Trial or Hearing. The court which hears the case should satisfy itself whether the child is improperly restrained,[61] and whether its comfort and education are properly attended to.[62] The court is not restricted to the ordinary modes of trial,[63] or bound down by any particular form of proceeding;[64] but it may direct that the child be brought before it[65] and may examine it privately,[66] and may also avail itself of affidavits or other reasonable and proper sources of information.[67] The matter may be referred to a master to inquire and report as to who will be a fit person to have custody of the child,[68] or that may be inquired of in open court,[69] or the court may determine from its own knowledge alone.[70] In contests between parents over the custody of the children neither party is entitled to a jury trial as a matter of right.[71]

except in case of its manifest abuse.[73] The chancellor, by virtue of his general jurisdiction over infants, may order an infant not only to be relieved from illegal restraint, but to be surrendered to its parents.[74] The decree, in awarding the custody of the children, while final in determining the present rights of the parties,[75] should not be permanent but temporary in its nature and effect,[76] and should be left open to future control and modification by the court as subsequent conditions may require for the good of the children.[77] And the court may by its decrees change the custody of the child from one parent to the other as in its judgment the interest and care of the child require.[78] It is the duty of the court to preserve its control over the infant, so as to enforce its future decrees,[79] and therefore it has power to make an order that security be given that the child shall not be taken out of the state.[80] It is also proper that the court should qualify its award by such limitations and restrictions as may seem expedient to preserve the natural rights of the unsuccessful parent, if this can be done without jeopardizing the welfare of the children.[81] A change of the custody of the child from one parent to the other changes its domestic status accordingly.[82]

Statute curtailing discretion.— The discretion given to courts under the rule of common law as to the custody of children is curtailed by N. J. Facts showing abuse of discretion.—Where, on habeas corpus for the custody of a minor child, it appeared that the mother abandoned both the child and its father; that her general reputation was bad; and that she had no means of her own, was not in any employment, and was dependent on her parents, who were in moderate circumstances; and that the father was an industrious, well-to-do man of fairly good habits, who had always provided well for his family, and was taking good care of the child, it was an abuse of discretion for the court to award the child to the mother. there has been some difference of opinion as to whether, in the absence of statute, this is a legal or merely a moral obligation,[85] the better view undoubtedly is that the obligation is a legal one.[86] At the present time the duty is very generally expressly imposed by statute, and under such statutes is necessarily a legal one.[87]

B. Actions to Compel Support or Payment For Necessaries — 1. Jurisdiction. Equity has general jurisdiction of a suit by a wife to compel her husband to support their infant children,[50] but it has been held that a minor child has no right of action in equity against its father to compel him to maintain or educate it during its minority.[51] In Illinois the county court is the proper forum under the statute for proceedings to compel a parent to support his infant child.[52]

2. Limitation of Actions.[53] Where there is a continuing contract by the parent to pay the amount expended by another person for necessaries for the child, limitations do not run against specific items of the account but the statute runs only from the time the last item was furnished;[54] but where the parent has merely assented to retain a liability for the support of his child so that no other person could support it and recover therefor unless he omitted such duty, no item furnished by another person would have any relation to any other and the statute would run as to each item from the time it was furnished.[55]

3. Parties. Under a statute providing that societies for the prevention of cruelty to children may prefer complaints under any law relating to or affecting the children, such a society or the president thereof may institute a complaint under a statute which designates one neglecting to provide for his children as a disorderly person, and provides for compelling him to give indemnity for their support.[56]

4. Pleading.[57] The complaint in an action against a father for articles furnished to the child must state that such articles were necessary,[58] and that the child stood in need thereof at the time of their purchase and delivery.[59] So also a complaint in an action against a father to recover for the support of a child which fails to state that the father had abandoned or neglected the child, or that he knew of or promised to pay for the services of plaintiff, does not state a cause of action.[60] A complaint for money as due plaintiff for the support of defendant's child, alleging that the support was estimated at a certain rate per week but not that plaintiff agreed to pay or that the support was reasonably worth such sum, is sufficiently answered by an affidavit of defense alleging that defendant never agreed to pay any board nor did plaintiff demand it, but on the contrary refused to charge any, wherefore defendant, recognizing his obligation, made presents to plaintiff's wife far exceeding the value of the board as charged, and that while the child was with plaintiff defendant paid for its clothes and other necessaries.[61] In a petition against a father for failure to support his child, defendant must take advantage of failure of the petition to show that the child was under twenty-one years of age by plea and not by special demurrer.[62] Where an action to recover for necessaries is based upon an express agreement to pay therefor, there can be no recovery except on proof of such an agreement.[63]

5. Evidence.[64] Where an infant having no guardian and living with his mother attends a school, it will be presumed that he was sent by the mother, and she is liable for the tuition.[65] One claiming to recover against the parent as for necessaries furnished to the child, in the absence of the parent's authority or consent, must show that the articles were in the nature of necessaries,[66] and that the parent failed to supply them.[67] A person attempting to hold the father liable for necessaries furnished his child while in the custody of the mother who had abandoned the father's house must show that the mother was justified in taking the child away.[68] In an action for boarding defendant's son the burden is on plaintiff to prove by a preponderance of evidence that when the son came to him to board he was authorized to procure board upon the father's credit and that plaintiff boarded the son relying solely upon such credit.[69] In an action to recover from a father for necessaries furnished to his minor child, evidence as to the circumstances of the father is admissible to determine whether the articles furnished corresponded with his position in life and his duty to his children;[70] but evidence of the standing of the father and the expectancy of the child is not admissible on the question of the value of board and care furnished to the child, payment for which is sought to be enforced against the father.[71] Evidence that defendant permitted his son to bring home some of the articles purchased from plaintiff may be considered on the question of ratification by defendant of his son's purchase.[72] In an action to recover for the support of defendant's child, where it is charged by the court that the law imposes a legal obligation on defendant to pay for the keeping of his child, evidence as to what the claimant said as to whether he expected compensation for the support of the child is immaterial.[73] Slight evidence will support an allegation of a promise by a parent to pay for the support of his child or for necessaries furnished to it;[74] and the fact that a father had made a conditional promise to pay a debt contracted by his minor child is evidence of a previous authority to the child to contract the debt.[75] Where in an action against a father for necessaries furnished his infant son it is shown that plaintiff gave receipts to the infant in his own name and made out bills for the balance against the infant, such facts, if not explained, are conclusive that the credit was given to the infant and not to the parent.[76]

6. Trial.[77] In an action against a parent for the support of or necessaries furnished to the child, the question of the parent's liability is for the jury, under proper instructions.[78]

C. Charging Support on Child's Estate — 1. General Rule. While in a proper case the support and education of a child may be made a charge against its estate,[81] the father cannot be allowed to use the property of the child for its support and education,[82] unless this is absolutely necessary,[83] or to charge the estate of the child for its support and education,[84] save under exceptional circumstances.[85] Where, however, the duty of support has developed upon the mother, she is entitled to be allowed a reasonable amount out of the property of the children for their maintenance and education,[86] without reference to her own ability to support and educate them,[87] and such allowance may be made not only to provide for the future,[88] but also to reimburse her for past expenditures.[89]

2. WHEN CHARGE OR ALLOWANCE PROPER — a. In General. An allowance to the father for maintenance of the child is proper where the father has been obliged to contract debts in supporting the child.[90] But it has been held that even a mother should not be allowed for maintenance and support of the child where she has received all the income of the child's land,[91] and the child's labor while at home and its wages while away,[92] and where the value of the child's labor for the mother was equal to the value of his maintenance.[93]

b. Existence of Trust Fund. A trust fund created or bequeathed for the purpose of supporting or educating the child may be applied for that purpose,[94] notwithstanding the liability of the father,[95] and the fact that he is able to support or educate the child out of his own means.[96]

either as a provision for the future,[98] or as a reimbursement for past expenditures;[99] and such allowance may be either for the entire support of the child or to supplement the father's contribution thereto, according to the circumstances of each case.[1]

3. AMOUNT OF ALLOWANCE. The amount of the allowance necessarily depends upon the circumstances of each case.[2] When an allowance for past support of an infant is asked for on behalf of a parent, the court will make such an allowance only as it would have made if it had been asked for in advance,[3] and will not be influenced by any subsequent fortuitous increase of the infant's fortune,[4] neither will it more than reimburse the parent for actual and reasonable disbursements.[5] A father is not entitled to the whole of the income of his minor child's estate on the ground that it is necessary to enable him to support an establishment suitable for such child as a member of his family.[6]

4. CONTRACTS BETWEEN PARENT AND CHILD AS TO SUPPORT. Where an infant resides with his parent, who supplies him with necessaries, there is no implied promise on his part to pay for his support,[7] and he will not be bound even by an express promise to pay therefor.[8] So also a promise by an adult or emancipated child to pay the parent for support during infancy and before emancipation is void for lack of consideration.[9] But it has been held that where a mother, in consideration of occupying her child's estate, agrees to board such child, and the child, upon coming of age, demands and receives rent for such occupation, the mother will be entitled to a compensation for the board of such child.[10]

Change in parent's circumstances.— Where a patient applies for allowance for past maintenance, the court will generally consider his means at the time the support is furnished. Where, however, at the time a parent had used the child's means in supporting her, his own means were not then such as to require him, in view of her estate, to contribute to her support, but subsequently thereto, and before the application by him for an order allowing such use of her means, or the institution by her of a suit for an account of her estate, there had been, pending her infancy, such an increase in the value of his estate as would enable him to reimburse her estate in part or wholly without affecting his own support, such reimbursement should be required. Circumstances to be considered.— Where the mother and her infant child live together and the mother is unable to support the child and the land is used for the common support of the family, such fact should be considered in estimating the amount of the infant's board which the mother is to be allowed, and the fact that the mother has elected to take a homestead interest instead of dower in the husband's estate is also to be considered. 5. Contracts of Parent as Affecting Child. A parent cannot, without the authority of the court, make a contract for the support or education of the child which is binding on the child or enforceable against its property.[11]

6. Proceedings For Allowance. A father is not entitled to have the income of the estate of his infant children appropriated for their support without an order of some proper court based upon his inability to support them properly;[12] but application should be made in advance for an allowance from the child's estate,[13] and while an allowance for past maintenance may be granted,[14] an inquiry as to granting an allowance for past maintenance will not be directed as a matter of course, but only upon a special case showing good grounds therefor.[15] A proceeding to have the child's estate applied to its maintenance must be in the court having jurisdiction of the estate[16] and during the time it has such jurisdiction.[17] The infant is not an indispensable party to a bill filed by its father against the trustee of its estate to have an allowance for its support and education decreed to be paid by the trustee out of its annual income.[18] Where the estate of a child consists solely of property devised and bequeathed to him by his mother, a petition by the father for an order directing the application of the income of the child's real estate for his support and education should show the amount of net annual income of the child, the circumstances in life, and the style of living to which the family of the mother have been accustomed, and the circumstances of the petitioner as to whether he is able to support the child.[19] Where the father claims contribution from the child's estate for its support, the burden is upon him to show the necessity therefor,[20] and he will be charged with the child's support during periods as to which he does not establish such necessity.[21] The allowance is within the discretion of the court,[22] which should consider the circumstances of the father,[23] the necessary and proper expense of maintaining his family,[24] and the amount of the child's fortune.[25]

Conn. Gen. St. § 3318, declaring that children able to support indigent parents shall provide support for them, and if they neglect to do so the superior court may order them to contribute to such support such sum as may be reasonable and necessary, does not impose on a daughter an absolute legal duty to support her mother, but the duty imposed does not come into force till the court has found the necessity for aid and the ability to aid, and prescribed to what extent aid shall be furnished, and hence the obligation does not carry with it the right to determine the place where such support shall be furnished, and the court is empowered to order the daughter to contribute to her mother's support in the place of the latter's residence. Condon v. Pomroy-Grace, 73 Conn. 607, 48 Atl. 756, 53 L. R. D. Contracts of Child to Pay For Support of Parent. A child is liable for support or necessaries furnished to the parent at his instance or request, or upon his undertaking to pay therefor, the same as upon any other contract,[36] and the contract need not be express and may be implied from the conduct of the child in reference to what is being done or furnished.[37] It has been held, however, that the statutory liability of the child to support the parent is not a sufficient consideration for a promise by the child to pay for past expenditures made by a third person for such purpose.[38]

A husband is under no obligation to support his wife's parents;[39] but it has been held that, where the son-in-law supports a parent-in-law in his family, an obligation to pay for such support is not implied and there can be no recovery therefor,[40] unless there is an express

V. SERVICES AND EARNINGS OF CHILD.

A. Right of Parents — 1. General Rule. The father, as the head of the family, is entitled to the services and earnings of the child so long as the latter is legally under his custody or control and not emancipated.[43] While the parents are living together the mother is not entitled to the services or earnings of the Support of father-in-law by widow.—Where a father who had lived in a son's family for many years without paying or agreeing to pay board continued, after the son's death, to live with the widow under the same circumstances, there was no implied contract to pay board to the widow. 4. Assignment of Child's Earnings. The parent may assign the child's earnings[52] so as to give the assignee the right to receive and hold the same as against the child.[53]

5. Military Service of Child. receive its wages,[65] consents to its receiving its own earnings[66] or entering into a partnership,[67] authorizes the child to contract with an employer and to receive his wages,[68] confirms and approves an agreement of employment making wages payable to the child,[69] makes no objection to a contract made by the child for his services on his own account,[70] permits the child to leave the parental homestead and labor for his own benefit[71] or shift for himself,[72] or in any other way emancipates the child;[73] or where, by contract, he releases the right to a third person.[74]

3. Resumption of Right. A parent who has relinquished his claim to his child's earnings may subsequently resume his parental authority and right;[75] but a parent who has allowed the child to contract for himself and receive his wages cannot withdraw his consent at his pleasure after the wages have been earned, so as to acquire any right to wages previously earned.[76]

D. Abandonment or Loss of Parent's Right. The right of a parent to the child's earnings arises out of the duty to support the child;[77] and hence it is lost where the parent abandons the child,[78] neglects or refuses to support and educate it,[79] or forces it to leave the home and labor for its own livelihood.[80] So also a parent loses the right to the value of the child's services by voluntarily releasing his parental control to a third person.[81] A parent's right to the services and earnings of his child ceases when the child arrives at majority,[82] and the marriage of the child also terminates the parent's right,[83] even though the parent did not consent to the marriage.[84] Where the mother is awarded the custody of the child upon being divorced from the father, the father is thereby deprived of all right to the services of the child.[85] A pauper parent who is not supporting the child is not entitled to its earnings.[86] It has been held that a mother's right to her minor child's services ceases when she remarries and the child is supported by its stepfather.[87]

Duration of contract.— A parol contract between a father and son by which the son is to work on the father's farm for an indefinite length of time and to be paid the reasonable value of his services cannot be extended beyond the father's death. In re Merchant, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 875.
Agreement as to amount not necessary.— An express promise of a father to pay for the services of his adult daughter residing and in such case the child's claim for the amount due is good as against the parent,[1] and his creditors.[2] It is not even necessary that there should be an express and definite contract between the parent and child,[3] but a mutual understanding that the services are to be paid for is sufficient to entitle the child to payment;[4] and if from the circumstances a contract by the parent to pay for the services may be inferred, the child is entitled to recover therefor.[5]

This is invariably true where the contract of employment was made by the parent,[7] but it may also be true where the contract was made by the child.[8] Consequently an action for the work, labor, and services of an unemancipated child must be brought in the name of the parent.[9] As between parents the right of action for the child's earnings is in the father.[10] A father is not precluded from recovering wages for work done by his minor son by the fact that the work was done by the son against his express dissent,[11] or by the fact that the employer, who was informed of the father's dissent, notified him to come and take his son away, which he neglected to do.[12] It has been held that a father has no claim upon a person receiving wages of an infant from his employer, on the order of the infant, to recover the amount so received;[13] but a father has been held entitled to recover in his own name money paid by a young child for fancy articles sold to the child, although without fraud.[14] Where the parent has relinquished or lost his right to the child's earnings or emancipated the child, the right of action for the child's earnings is in the child,[15] and the parent cannot maintain an

The fact that a minor is not dependent upon his mother but contributes to her support does not deprive the mother of the right which the law confers on the parent to recover for the services of the child. Simpson v. Buck, 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 337.

Where the father testifies in behalf of his son and treats as belonging to the son a claim upon which a suit is brought by him, after attaining his majority, for services rendered while an infant, the presumption of emancipation arises, and in the absence of rebutting evidence the action will be held to be properly brought in the name of the son. Scott v. White, 71 Ill. 287; Aulger v. Badgely, 29 Ill. App. 336.

Notice of emancipation.— If a minor is action therefor.[16] It has also been held that where, by the terms of a contract made by the parent for the employment of the child, the wages are to be paid to the child, the right of action therefor is in the child and not the parent;[17] and a parent who has agreed with the child to relinquish his right to services cannot recover the child's wages from the employer.[18] The mere consent of a father that his son may sue for services rendered before he had obtained majority will not authorize the son to sue if emancipation or waiver of the father's right did not take place until after the services had been performed.[19]

2. Defenses. Emancipation of the child,[20] or payment to a child who is actually emancipated by his father and an express promise is made to pay him for his labor, with the consent of his father, no other notice of his emancipation is necessary to entitle him to maintain an action upon the promise. Wood v. Corcoran, 1 Allen (Mass.) 405.

Effect of agreement between parent and child for relinquishment of parent's right.— An agreement between the father and son by which the former agrees to relinquish his right to services of the latter during his minority for a certain sum per annum, reserving a claim upon his wages to that amount and the right to treat the agreement as void in case that sum is not paid, and also to have the care of his son and the control of his affairs during his minority so far as to see that he gets his pay from those for whom he works, and that his wages are kept and used for his benefit, is not such an agreement of emancipation as divests the father of his right to sue and collect pay for his son's work. A private arrangement between the father and the son that the wages under a contract made by the father for the services of the son shall be paid to the latter does not give the son a right of action therefor. Kauffelt v. Moderwell, 21 Pa. St. 222.

Void contract.— Where an indenture was made between an infant and the father on the one part and another person on the other for the infant's services, the compensation for which was to be paid to him, but the indenture proved to be void, the infant could not maintain an action on a quantum meruit for his services but the right of action was in the father. Letts v. Brooks, Lalor (N. Y.) 36.

Agreement by father and subsequent divorce giving mother custody.— Where defendant received the minor daughter of A into his family with a promise to provide for and educate her as his own daughter, and subsequently A's wife obtained a divorce a mensa et thoro from her husband, and the custody of the daughter was awarded to her, but the daughter continued to reside with defendant two years longer without any new agreement, when he sent her to her mother, having failed to support and educate her according to his contract, it was held that defendant was not liable to an action by the mother in her name for the daughter's services, although the failure of defendant to fulfil his contract was not before known to the mother, the court saying that all the benefits of the contract by way of compensation for services were to inure to the minor herself, and that, there being an express contract by defendant to make compensation for the services of the child, there was no implied contract to pay either father or mother for the same services, and under the circumstances there was no implied promise by defendant to the mother for services performed by the child after the divorce and assignment of the custody to the mother. The fact that the child has agreed with his father to buy his time for the remainder of his minority by paying a certain sum therefor, which has not been paid, does not prevent the father from maintaining an action to recover for services performed by the son under a contract made by him without the father's knowledge. Estoppel to rely on defense of emancipation.— In an action for the wages of plaintiff's son, where the defense is that the labor emancipated or entitled to receive his own earnings,[21] is a good defense to an action by the parent therefor; but payment to a child is no defense to a suit by the parent where the child was not entitled to his earnings,[22] and the employer was cognizant of that fact.[23] Where a child entered into a contract of employment without his father's consent, his failure to complete his contract is no defense to a suit by the father for the services actually rendered.[24] Payment to a father is no defense to an emancipated infant's suit for his wages, if the employer knew of the fact of emancipation.[25]

3. PARTIES.[26] A minor who is emancipated and allowed to collect his own earnings is entitled to recover them without joining his father as a party defendant;[27] and where a joint contract has been made by an infant and an adult, under which money has been earned, the father cannot sue the adult in his own name as the infant's substitute in the action, as if he himself had been a joint contractor.[28]

4. PLEADING.[29] The complaint in an action by a parent for the services of the child must set forth the amount claimed or sued for;[30] and when the mother is plaintiff it must be averred that the father is dead,[31] or that the mother is entitled to the services of the child as guardian or otherwise.[32] It has also been held that in an action by the mother an averment that the child is actually living with and was done under a contract made by the son, with the father's consent, to work on his own account, and it appears that, before the action, defendant paid a portion of the wages to the son, proof that defendant, since the action, made a tender of the residue to plaintiff, who applied it pro tanto on the claim, does not prevent him from relying on the defense of a general emancipation by plaintiff of his son. McIntyre v. Fuller, 2 Allen (Mass.) 345.

Contract with parent.— Where a father and his minor son have entered into a written agreement with a third person, whereby the son is to work for the latter, until arriving at full age, for a certain compensation, the fact that the father has emancipated the son is no defense to an action by the father against the employer on the contract. Intention of parent that child receive his pay.— Where plaintiff gave defendant notice to pay the son no more wages, and afterward allowed the son to receive a portion of this balance without objection, it was held to be sufficient to justify defendant in supposing that he still intended to have the son receive his pay. Implied authority to pay wages to child.— Where plaintiff hired out his minor son to defendant, and, while the son was so hired, remarked to defendant that he (plaintiff) should let his son have half his wages, defendant had no implied authority to pay more than half the son's wages to the son himself. Winn v. Sprague, 35 Vt. 243.

Under the Iowa statute payment to a minor under a contract for services made directly with him, but with the knowledge of the parent, is a good defense to an action brought by the parent to recover for such services. Nixon v. Spencer, 16 Iowa 214.

Settlement with minor.— Where a minor, at a great distance from his father, entered into a contract to labor for another, which he performed, and the employer afterward refused payment, insisting that he acted only as the agent of a third person, with whom the minor was induced, by his own destitute situation, to settle, taking his negotiable note payable at a distant day for the balance due, the father was not concluded by these proceedings but might instantly maintain an action for the wages of the son against the person with whom he originally contracted. Attachment of wages by parent's creditors. — It is no defense to a suit for wages by an infant, to whom his time has been given by his father, and who was hired with a knowledge of this fact on the part of defendant, that the wages had been trusteed in a suit against the father. supported by her is an essential part of the statement of her cause of action.[33] In a suit for work done by plaintiff during his minority, an answer alleging that plaintiff was hired to defendant by his father for the term of his minority, defendant agreeing to give him certain articles at the close of the term, and that after plaintiff attained his majority an accounting was had between plaintiff, his father, and defendant, when the latter paid and plaintiff received a certain amount in full payment of the demand sued for, is good.[34]

5. ISSUES. In an action by a father for the services of his son, the legitimacy of the son is not in issue and need not be proved[35] unless the relationship is denied by defendant.[36] Where a mother sues to recover the wages of a child under a statute providing that if a father neglects to provide for his children the mother may receive their wages if she be of suitable character to have the custody of the children, her character is in issue, although the question is not raised by the pleadings, and defendant may show that it is not such as to entitle her to the benefit of the statute.[37] Where a minor living with an adult who is neither parent nor guardian is hired by such person to a third person, the latter cannot, in a suit for the amount due for the services, dispute the right of the adult to the custody of the minor.[38]

6. EVIDENCE.[39] Where a minor is allowed by his father to make his own contract for services, the presumption is that he is entitled to recover the wages for himself;[40] and it has been held that a father who sues to recover for work done by his son must prove that in the doing of the work he was the principal and the son the agent, either in fact or in law — either that the son was emancipated and was working under him as his servant, or that he was not emancipated.[41] In assumpsit by a father for the work and labor of his minor son, defendant may show from the practice of the father in other cases the authority of the son to make a special contract, and that such contract was not fulfilled by him;[42] and in order to show the authority of the son to make the contracts it is competent for defendant to prove that the father had previously permitted his son to hire himself out to divers persons to perform the services stipulated for in such contracts and to settle and adjust the claims arising out of such contracts, and that such had been the practice of the father.[43] Where a mother sues for the wages of her son under a statute allowing her to receive the earnings of the children when the father neglects to provide for them, and she testifies that her husband has done nothing for several years to support the family, evidence is admissible to show where the son has been living since he left defendant's employ as bearing on whether the husband has done something toward his support.[44] In an action by a child for wages under a contract made by the father for her services, it is not error to admit in evidence receipts given by the father for money paid him on account of what was due the child, where the child was living with him under his supervision, and the jury might well have found that he was acting as her authorized agent or exercising parental care and authority not at all inconsistent with his relinquishment of the profits of her services.[45] That plaintiff was present and assenting when his minor child entered into a contract of employment which was signed by her in her own name and not by him does not alone establish an intention on his part to relinquish his right to the child's wages.[46] Where a minor who has left his father's house in another state sues, upon attaining majority, to recover for services rendered while under age, the jury must be satisfied that the father had emancipated his son or given him his time while he worked for defendant or waived the right to recover for his services generally or in the particular case;[47] and, while proof that the father permitted the son to come into the state for employment and to make a contract for his services authorizes the jury to infer an emancipation or waiver of the right to the child's earnings, it does not require that they should do so.[48] The mere fact that an infant is working and collecting the proceeds of his labor does not show permission of his parent for him to receive for his own that which in law belongs to the parent;[49] but evidence that the parent knew that he was receiving the proceeds of his own labor might be sufficient to authorize an inference that permission had been granted for him to engage in the occupation and receive for his own the proceeds of the labor.[50]

7. TRIAL.[51] Whether a father has relinquished his claim to his child's earnings and recognized the child's right to control them himself is a question of fact to be submitted to the jury.[52] The usual rules as to the propriety of instructions[53] apply in an action for the services or earnings of a child.[54]

8. AMOUNT OF RECOVERY. A parent suing for the services of his minor child is entitled to recover the value of the services[55] to the person to whom they were rendered,[56] regardless of any special contract of the child.[57] The expenditures of defendant in supporting the child are to be deducted from the gross value of its services,[58] unless defendant has been notified that the parent will furnish neces-

VI. ACTIONS FOR INJURIES TO CHILD[61] AND LOSS OF SERVICES.

A. Parent's Right of Action[62] — 1. IN GENERAL. A parent has as a general rule a right of action against a person whose wrongful act or omission has caused an injury to the child.[63] As between the parents this right belongs primarily to the father;[64] but as a general rule it is given to the mother where, by reason of value of such services, reduce the amount of recovery by showing that the son expended a portion of the wages paid him for clothing and other necessaries, since defendant did not supply them. Dunn v. Altman, 50 Mo. App. 231.

Injury from defective highway.— Me. St. (1821) § 17, providing that a person receiving an injury through a defect in a highway, either in his person, horses, etc., or "other property," shall have his remedy against the town, does not authorize a father to maintain an action against a town for the loss of services of a minor son in his employ in consequence of an injury from such a defect. the father's death or otherwise, the right to the custody and services of the child has devolved upon her.[65]

2. BASIS OF RIGHT OF ACTION. The parent's right to recover for an injury to the child rests upon the doctrine of compensation.[66] It is generally stated that the basis of the right of action is the resulting loss of the services of the child;[67] and according to some authorities this is the sole basis, so that if there be no actual loss of services, there can be no recovery by the parent;[68] but other authori-

Decree giving mother custody but leaving father liable for support.—A divorce in which the "care and custody" of a child are decreed to the wife, without charging its maintenance to either spouse, does not change the duty of support from the husband to the wife, and hence she is not entitled to maintain an action for loss of the child's services, occasioned by his negligent injury. ties base the right of action upon the right to services rather than the actual rendition of services.[69] The more reasonable view is that the right of action is based not only upon the right to services but also upon the duty of care and maintenance,[70] so that if the parent is by the wrong of another in injuring the child put to extra expense in fulfilling his duty, he is entitled to recover indemnity from the wrong-doer, without reference to any loss of services resulting from the injury.[71]

3. Where Right to Services Relinquished or Lost. The parent has no right of action where at the time of the injury the child had reached majority,[72] or had been emancipated,[73] or the parent had relinquished or lost the right to the child's services.[74]

4. Where Child Too Young to Render Services. While it has been held that where the child is at the time of the injury too young to perform any services and is cured or dies of the injury before it reaches the age to perform services, there can be no recovery,[75] the better view, and that supported by the weight of authority, is that in such case the parent is entitled to recover for his expenditures in the care and cure of the child.[76]

5. Where Child Living Away From Parent or In Service of Another. The English rule is that, where the child has left home and is in the service of another at the time of the injury, the parent is not entitled to recover as for a loss of service, although he had not voluntarily relinquished his right to such service;[77] but in the United States the courts consider that a parent who retains the right to a child's services may recover for a loss resulting from an injury to the child, although at the time of such injury the child was living with or in the service of another person,[78] although the right of a widowed mother to recover for the loss of the services of the child is dependent upon the child having been in her services or residing with and supported by her at the time of the injury.[79] Of course if the child is legally bound out to service to another, so that at the time the parent has no right to the child's service, the parent cannot recover.[80]

6. Consent of Parent to Employment of Child. A parent who consents to the employment of his child in a dangerous service assumes the risks incident to the service and is not entitled to recover if the child is injured in the service,[81] but such consent does not prevent a recovery for an injury resulting, not from the ordinary risks of the service, but from the employer's negligence.[82] And a parent may recover for an injury due merely to the risks of the service where the child was employed therein against the will of his parent,[83] or even without his consent.[84] In such case the parent's recovery is based on his common-law rights and not on the question whether the child could have recovered in a suit for himself,[85] as the father, being a stranger to the contract of employment, is not bound by any of its terms.[86] A general consent of the parent to the son entering into the service of a particular employer does not prevent a recovery by the parent for an injury resulting from the child's being employed, without the consent of the parent, in work more hazardous than that which was in contemplation when the parent consented to the employment.[87]

7. Causing Death of Child. At common law the parent has no right of action for the death of the child,[88] but under the statutes the parent is usually given a right of action for the wrongful killing of the child.[89] Even at common law the death of the child as a result of the injury does not preclude a recovery by the parent for loss of services and expenses up to the time of death.[90]

Duty of parent to inform himself of change in child's duties.— When a minor has entered the service of a railroad company in a capacity not requiring him to board moving trains, the father is not guilty of contributory negligence in failing to inform himself that the scope of the son's employment has been changed so as to require him to board moving trains, and is not precluded from recovering for loss of the son's services owing to an accident caused by the more dangerous character of the son's employment. damages for loss of services against a person for procuring the marriage of his daughter, who has in good faith and without force or imposition entered into the marriage contract.[91]

9. Torts Personal to Child. Where the tort is purely personal to the child it seems that the parent cannot recover.[92]

10. Separate Causes of Action of Parent and Child. An injury to a child gives rise to two causes of action, one on behalf of the parent, the other on behalf of the child,[93] and the two causes of action cannot be joined.[94] It follows that a recovery by the parent for the injury and loss which he has suffered does not bar a recovery by the child for the injury personal to himself;[95] and conversely, a recovery by the parent on behalf of the child for the injury personal to the latter does not bar a recovery by the parent for his own loss and damages resulting from the injury.[96] Neither is the commencement of an action by an infant by his father as next friend for personal injuries a waiver of the father's right to recover for loss of services of the infant.[97]

such an action only damages personal to the child and not those personal to the parent can be recovered,[1] and the amount recovered belongs to the child.[2]

B. Persons Liable. If the child is injured in the course of a dangerous service the employer is liable;[3] but the mere fact that a child was injured while in the employ of a person by whom he has been employed without the knowledge of the parent does not render the employer liable in an action by the parent for the loss of the services of the child, where the employment was not hazardous and the injury was not due to the employer's negligence.[4] A parent cannot of course recover against one who was not in person or by his agent the proximate cause of the injury.[5]

C. Defenses[6] — 1. In General. The mere fact that the parent allowed the child to receive his own wages is not a defense to the parent's action,[7] and, although the complete emancipation of the child would be a defense,[8] it must be pleaded and proved by defendant.[9] In an action by the mother, the fact that since the injury she has become unfit to have the custody of the child is not a defense.[10]

2. Contributory Negligence of Parent. The parent is required to exercise reasonable care in regard to the safety of the child,[11] and contributory negligence on the part of the parent will preclude a recovery by him for an injury to or the death of the child.[12] Whether or not the parent has been guilty of such contribu-

asserted that merely allowing a young child to go alone on the public streets is not such negligence as will necessarily preclude a recovery by the parent,[17] although there are cases in which a recovery has been denied under such circumstances.[18] Where, notwithstanding reasonable precautions taken by a parent in view of his circumstances and station in life, a young child strays from home or from the parent's care and is injured or killed, the parent is not ordinarily chargeable with contributory negligence.[19]

3. CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF CHILD. As a general rule a parent can recover for injuries to his child only under the same circumstances of prudence as would be required if the action were on behalf of the infant,[20] and hence the contributory negligence of the child may defeat the parent's recovery.[21] But it has been held that, where the child is employed in a dangerous service without the parent's consent and is injured in the course of such service, the contributory negligence of the child will not defeat a recovery by the parent against the employer.[22]

D. Form of Action. Case,[23] or trespass per quod servitium amisit,[24] is a proper form of action by a parent to recover for an injury to the child.

E. Notice of Claim. An action by a father for loss of services and expenses resulting from an injury to his child is not an action to recover damages for an injury to the person, within the meaning of a statute providing that no such action shall be maintained unless within a certain time after the injury a notice of the claim is served on the person against whom it is made.[25]

F. Pleading.[26] The complaint must show a cause of action in plaintiff and contain all averments necessary to support a recovery.[27] Thus it must appear

W. 637 (holding that an allegation that defendant, in violation of the statute, sold to plaintiff's minor son, fifteen years of age, a revolver with which he afterward injured himself, does not show a cause of action in plaintiff to recover for loss of services and expense of caring for the son, as it should be shown that the accident ought to have been anticipated by defendant as a probable result of the sale); Dulaney v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 21 Mo. App. 597 (hold-that plaintiff was entitled to the child's services,[28] and has been deprived of the same because of the injury.[29] But it is not necessary that all facts constituting defendant's negligence be set out in specific detail.[30] Where the action is brought by the mother she must plead the facts showing her right to recover instead of the father,[31] and that at the time of the injury the child was in her service.[32] Where an action by a parent against an employer of the child for injuries to the child is based upon the employer's negligence, the complaint need not allege that the employment was without the parent's consent.[33] A recovery for prospective future loss of services cannot be had unless claimed in the declaration.[34] Where the pleadings make the loss of services the basis of the action and it appears that the child is too young to render any services, there can be no recovery.[35] Where plaintiff's declaration claims damages for the loss of services of her minor son who was injured on defendant's road, the further allegation, by way of showing the aggravated nature of the tort, that death resulted from such injury, does not change the nature of the action so as to make it a suit for the death of the son, for which she has no right to recover.[36] Where the complaint alleges the child to be of an age when prima facie incapable, a special plea setting out contributory negligence of the child is insufficient unless there is also an averment of capacity.[37] Where defendant denies negligence and alleges contributory negligence of the child and others accompanying him, this limits defendant's right to prove contributory negligence to that pleaded, and ing that under Rev. St. §§ 2121, 2122, giving a right of action to the parent for one who was a minor and unmarried when injured, a petition not stating that the minor was unmarried is defective); Gulf, etc., R. Action for benefit of child.— Under Minn. Gen. St. (1894) § 5164, providing that a father may maintain an action for injuries to his child, the complaint need not allege expressly that the action is brought for the child's benefit, where it alleges all facts necessary to bring the case within the statute. defendant cannot prove negligence of the child's mother in allowing him to go on defendant's grounds.[38] Where in an action for personal injuries to the child the alleged trespass is the taking of the child in a buggy and driving off with it, when the horse took fright and ran away, throwing out the child, a plea merely alleging the permission of the mother, without averring any authority or circumstances implying an authority in her to give such permission, is defective.[39]

G. Evidence.[40] The father's right to the services of the child is presumed from the fact of minority unless emancipation appears,[41] and where deceased was a minor and left a father who would have been entitled to his services if he had lived, the law implies a pecuniary loss for which damages may be given.[42] But the burden of proof is upon plaintiff to show the extent of his loss.[43] Where the action is based on the negligence of defendant, the burden of proving such negligence is on plaintiff.[44] It has also been held that he must also show ordinary care,[45] and the absence of contributory negligence on his part;[46] but as the burden of proving an affirmative defense is usually upon defendant,[47] the better view would appear to be that defendant must prove contributory negligence if he relies upon it.[48] Subject to the general rules of relevancy, competency, and materiality,[49] any evidence is admissible which legitimately tends to establish Evidence not admissible.— In an action for negligently causing the death of a boy nine years old, while driving across the track, evidence that the boy's father, who sues as administrator, was a man of wealth, and able to procure others to render the services in which the boy was engaged at the time of the accident, is inadmissible in defense where it is not shown that the boy was incapable of taking care of himself. It is proper to show the circumstances surrounding the parents' home, such as their pecuniary means, their mode of earning a livelihood, and their ability to employ a nurse for the child, for the purpose of enabling the jury to determine whether the parents used such care in protecting the child from danger as reasonably prudent persons would have done under like circumstances. A. 486, holding that a charge that a custodian of a child was negligent, if she permitted it to stray away from her control, so that in the exercise of ordinary care she could not have prevented it from going into a place of danger, which she might reasonably have apprehended it would do, is not erroneous, as invading the province of the jury.

73. Marbury Lumber Co. v. Westbrook, 121 Ala. 179, 25 So. 914 (holding that, in an action by a parent for damages for setting a minor son at work in a dangerous place, where the defense was plaintiff's consent to employment, and contributory negligence of the son, a charge that if plaintiff consented, and the son was negligent, she could not recover, was erroneous in not stating further that the son's negligence must have proximately contributed to the injury); McCarthy v. Cass Ave., etc., R. 74. Goodrich v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 97 Iowa 521, 66 N. Sup. (N. Y.) 435, 8 N. Y. Suppl. 432 (holding that there is no error in an instruction that damages for prospective loss of services are necessarily, to a great extent, speculative or conjectural, and that the jury may estimate them in the light of experience, and of such evidence as may be given).

75. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Henon, 68 S. W. 456, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 298, holding that where there is no plea that the father has emancipated the son, an instruction on that point is properly refused.

Clerical error.—Although the petition alleged only the expenditure of five dollars for medicine, an instruction that the jury might find for "medicine not to exceed twenty-five dollars" was not prejudicial, there being no proof that the medicine cost over five dollars, and the error being plainly a clerical one. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Henon, 68 S. W. 456, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 298.

76. Blackwell v. Hill, 76 Mo. App. 46 (holding that an instruction allowing the jury to find such damages as would compensate a father for the prospective loss of the earnings of an eight-year-old child during his minority is not objectionable, as having no evidence of such damages to support it, since from the nature of the case no direct proof of such earnings can be made, and such damages are left to the judgment, common experience, and enlightened conscience of the jurors, guided by the facts and circumstances in the case); McCool v. Coal Co., Wilcox (Pa.) 265 (holding that there being no evi-

or which are or might be misleading,[77] nor should the court instruct on matters which are immaterial.[78] The court should give requested instructions which correctly state the law as applicable to the facts,[79] but an instruction ignoring controverted issues in the case is properly refused.[80]

I. Relief Awarded — 1. Elements of Recovery — a. Loss of Services. The parent is entitled to recover for loss of services[81] both past[82] and prospecdence to show for what purpose a boy was employed, and what the scope of his employment was, it was error to charge that his employer was liable for his death, if he was killed by the proximate negligence of the defendant in a service to which he was put outside the scope of the employment for which his father had hired him); San Antonio St. R. W. 960], holding that in an action by a parent for injury to his minor son, a charge that plaintiff could recover for loss of services of the son while unable to work, and such further sum as would reasonably compensate him for the loss of capacity of the son, if any, to work or earn money, on account of the injuries during the minority of the son, was erroneous as being susceptible of the construction that plaintiff was entitled to double recovery while the son was unable to work.

Conflict of instructions.— Where plaintiff sued to recover expenses incurred by reason of an alleged sickness of his wife and child arising from being compelled to ride in defendant's unwarmed railway coach in inclement weather, an instruction that, if plaintiff's child was made sick by exposure to cold while on defendant's train, plaintiff was entitled to recover expenses incurred in consequence of the child's sickness, did not conflict with an instruction that plaintiff could not recover anything on the ground of the sickness and suffering of the child. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Campbell, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 613, 75 S. W. 564. An instruction "that the rule of law as to negligence in children is, that they are required to exercise only that degree of care and caution which persons of like age, capacity and experience might be reasonably expected to naturally or ordinarily use in the same situation and under the like circumstances, provided that the parents or persons having the control of such children have not been guilty of want of ordinary care in allowing them to be placed in such circumstances," is proper, and does not conflict with an instruction that if the children in question possessed the knowledge or ability of adults, the law would exact the same degree and prudence of them as of older persons. expenses rendered necessary by the injury.[92] But the parent can recover only for the expenses of restoring the child to health and not for expenses subsequently incurred in attempting to remove a disfigurement of the child, affecting its appearance only, resulting from the injury.[93] The parent can recover for such expenses only as have been actually incurred[94] or are immediately necessary to be incurred,[95] and not for future prospective or contingent expenses.[96] It has been held that in case the death of the child results from the injury, the parent may recover appropriate funeral expenses,[97] but in other jurisdictions this has been denied.[98] The expense of prosecuting an action by a father for an injury to his son has been held to be a proper subject of consideration by the jury in assessing the damages.[99]

d. Mental Suffering, Etc., of Parent. No recovery can be had for the outraged mental sensibility of the parent,[1] his mental anguish by reason of the child's illness,[2] or the loss of the society of the child.[3]

e. Damages Personal to Child. The parent can recover only for such damages as he has sustained,[4] and not for damages personal to the child,[5] such as the child's mental anguish,[6] physical pain and suffering,[7] or disfigurement from the accident or injury.[8]

f. Remote Damages. The parent is entitled to recover only proximate and not remote damages resulting from the injury.[9]

VII. PROPERTY OF CHILD.

A. In General. As a general rule any property acquired by the child in any way except by its own labor or services[13] belongs to the child and not to the parent,[14] and the parental relation gives the parent no right to receive,[15] use,[16] or

The parent cannot affect the rights of the child as to property in which it is interested by any concessions he may wish to make. Gaines v. Kendall, 176 Ill. 228, 52 N. E. 141.

The father cannot interpose any claim as against third persons who claim title from or possession under the infant. Banks v. Conant, 14 Allen (Mass.) 497.

Right as against creditors of parent.— Where the farm of a debtor was sold at sheriff's sale, and the debtor's minor son, who had been emancipated, took a lease of the farm from the purchaser and supported his father thereon, the crops and stock subsequently raised and acquired by the minor could not be taken for the debts of the father. McCloskey v. Cyphert, 27 Pa. St. 220.

Possession of child.— Where the legal title to land is in the children, the possession is also in them, although the father, as head of the family, claims the estate in his own right and apparently controls it. Fancher v. De Montegre, 1 Head (Tenn.) 40.

Sale and replacement of property.— If, during the infancy of his child, a parent, with the child's assent, sells the child's personal property, engaging to replace it, and the parent buys other property and gives it to the child, the parent, who is insolvent, retaining possession of it all the while, such substituted property belongs to the parent, and is subject to execution under a judgment against him. A father cannot recover in replevin the property of his minor son without disclosing in the pleading that he claims as guardian. Rhoades v. McNulty, 52 Mo. App. 301.

Liability of parent receiving property.— The father of an infant who receives her property will be liable to the same extent as if he had been legally constituted her guardian, so far as he has had the benefit of the property. Van Epps v. Van Deusen, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 64, 25 Am. Dec. 516.

Presumption from entry of father.— When a father has entered upon the estates of his children, the presumption is that he entered as their guardian and bailiff, and therefore the statute of limitations does not begin to run against the children until they attain twenty-one, and from that time at least a child has twenty years within which he may recover possession. children's guardian, lives with them in the home formerly occupied by herself and husband, and which after his death belongs to the children, subject to her dower right, she is not liable to the children for rent, in the absence of a promise by her to pay the same. Lamb v. Lamb, 146 N. Y. 317, 41 N. E. 26 [affirming 76 Hun 186, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 575]. But compare Keeney v. Henning, 58 N. J. Eq. 74, 42 Atl. 807, holding that where a child while residing with her mother earned and delivered to her wages sufficient for her support, the mother cannot escape an accounting to her for rents of the premises of her deceased husband, in which the child had an interest, because she occupied them with her family, and lived from the rents. Where a widowed mother with her minor daughter occupied a homestead left by the deceased husband, a portion of which had been devised to such daughter, the mother is not chargeable with rent for the period before the daughter's decease for occupying her portion. Hatch v. Hatch, 60 Vt. 160, 13 Atl. 791.

Revocable gift.— Where a father voluntarily conveyed land to his daughter, reserving the right to occupy the same or to revoke the gift, and did thereafter take and retain possession for fourteen years, it was to be treated as an advance as of the date of the father's death, and the father's estate was not liable to the daughter for the rents and profits for the fourteen years. Hughey v. Eichelberger, 11 S. C. 36.

Accounting of parent managing estate under agreement with child.—Where, on account of the weakness of intellect of the son, father and son agreed that the father should have the entire management and control of the estate of the son, should keep a regular account of his receipts and expenditures, and, in case the circumstances of the son should require it, should account with him and pay over all which should remain in his hands, but, should no settlement take place in the lifetime of the father, that he should act as the agent of the son until his death, the son was not entitled to interest on the fund in the hands of his father until after demand thereof upon him, even though the father had made use of the money, unless it appeared that he had actually received interest. Georgia.— Wilson v. Wright, Dudley 102.

Kentucky.— Pyle v. Cravens, 4 Litt. 17, holding that an assignment by a father of a claim to land belonging to an infant son is void, even if made under a power of attorney from the son to the father.

Mississippi.—Griffing v. Hopkins, Walk. 49, holding that a sale of infant's lands by his father is void, both under the common and the Spanish law, unless authorized by a decree of the proper tribunal; and it does not render such sale valid that it was for the benefit of the minor.

Vermont.— Keeler v. Fassett, 21 Vt. 539, 52 Am. Dec. 71.

Lien for improvements under contract with parent.— In a case where plaintiff had made improvements on a lot belonging to an infant without a guardian living with his mother and stepfather, all of whom were destitute and homeless, and such improvements were made under a contract with the mother, to whom plaintiff thought the property belonged, it was held that a court of equity would allow to plaintiff out of the rents the value of the improvements to the premises. Shumate v. Harbin, 35 S. C. 521, 15 S. E. 270.

Use of proceeds for support.— Where a settler died, and his widow sold his improvement right, the fact that the proceeds of the land were applied to the education of their minor child does not prevent it from recovering the land in ejectment after it arrives of age, since a sale for that object could only be legally ordered by the orphans' court. Senser v. Bower, 1 Penr. & W. (Pa.) 450.

Bill by parent for sale.— Where a mother brought against her infant children a bill to declare her rights in land under a conveyance to her "for the separate use and enjoyment of her and her family," it was held that, as the children probably had an interest in the property, no sale could be made under the bill, as it was not filed in conformity with the provisions of Tenn. Code, § 3324, requiring that a bill for the sale of property in which infants are interested shall be filed by the regular guardian of the infants for and on their behalf. McCall v. McCall, 1 Tenn. Ch. 500, holding further that it was doubtful whether in such a bill the court could declare the future right of the children so as to insure purchasers a good title.

A father cannot convey an easement in land of which the record title is in the minor son, although he has exercised acts of general ownership over the land. Farmer v. McDonald, 59 Ga. 509.

The mere presence of children, part-owners of land, when their father signs their names to a deed thereof, the consideration for which is all received by the father, does not make it their deed. McLane v. Canales, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 25 S. W. 29.

Consent of children to sale.— The fact that parents are in straightened circumstances, and that their infant children are possessed of personal property which they might properly part with for the purchase of land and a

the right to the child's earnings.[18] In some states, however, the parent has a usufructuary interest in the child's property,[19] and is entitled to administer it during his minority;[20] although even where such rule exists the parent is accountable to the child for the property,[21] and cannot convey such property without an order of court.[22]

B. Necessaries Furnished to Child by Parent. Things given to the child by the parent by way of support or as necessaries remain the property of the parent and do not belong to the child,[23] notwithstanding his possession of home, does not constitute a consideration moving to such infants for their consent to the sale of their property for such purpose. Burns v. Hill, 19 Ga. 22.

The usufruct exists only during marriage (Young v. Carl, 6 La. Ann. 412; Handy v. Parkison, 10 La. 92), and ceases on the death of either parent (Handy v. Parkison, supra).

Property not subject to usufruct.— The parent cannot retain the usufruct of the estate of the minor, which he may acquire by his own labor and industry, or which is left to him under the express condition that his father and mother shall not enjoy such usufruct. Ouliber v. His Creditors, 16 La. Ann. 287.

Sale and replacement of property.— Where a slave belonging to minors is sold by their father, and another purchased with the proceeds, the slave so purchased will, on his insolvency, pass to his creditors. Calmes v. Carruth, 12 Rob. (La.) 663.

Under the Spanish laws the father had the usufruct of his child's property, during his minority, and was not accountable for the profits, nor for the hire or wages of his slaves. McHardy v. McHardy, 7 Fla. 301.

A transfer in the District of Columbia of the property of a testator, there situated, to the father of certain minor legatees residing in Louisiana, who was fully empowered to collect and receive the same by the law of their domicile, is valid and binding on such minors, there being no showing of any creditors in Virginia, which was the domicile of the testator, although, if the property had been administered upon in that jurisdiction, the father would not have been entitled to receive or remove the property therefrom without an order made by a Virginia court, and the giving of satisfactory security. them;[24] and hence the parent has a right of action against a third person who causes or is responsible for the loss or destruction of such property, or deprives the child thereof.[25]

VIII. CONVEYANCES[26] AND CONTRACTS[27] BETWEEN PARENT AND CHILD.

A. In General. Contracts[28] and business dealings between a parent and child are not per se fraudulent,[29] but they must be treated just as are transactions between other persons,[30] and where the bona fides of their transactions is attacked the fraud must be clearly proved.[31]

B. Conveyances by Parent to Child. A conveyance from a parent to a child is not void merely because of the relationship of the parties,[32] nor is there any presumption from the mere existence of the relation that such conveyance is the result of undue influence;[33] but a strong presumption of undue influence may arise from the circumstances of a particular transfer, which will require close scrutiny of the transaction and cast the burden of proving its fairness upon the grantee.[34]

C. Conveyances by Child to Parent. Although a conveyance from a child to a parent may sometimes be deemed presumptively invalid by reason of the undue influence which the parent is supposed to have over the child while occupying a confidential relation,[35] the mere relationship does not render a conveyance from an adult child to a parent invalid,[36] but on the contrary such a conveyance

The undue influence which will avoid a deed is an unlawful or fraudulent influence which controls the will of the grantor. The affection, confidence, and gratitude of a parent to a child, which inspires a deed or gift, is a natural and lawful influence, and will not render the deed or gift voidable unless such influence has been so used as to confuse the judgment and control the will of the donor. Conveyance inequitable as against other children.— Where a conveyance from a parent to one of several children by way of gift is prima facie not a just or reasonable disposition of the parent's property, and the age and physical condition of the parent, the proportion of the property conveyed to the whole estate, and the circumstances surrounding the gift suggest fraud and undue influence, the transaction should be closely scrutinized, and the burden is upon the donee to overcome the presumption of undue influence arising from such circumstances. is prima facie valid and should be upheld unless its invalidity is affirmatively established.[37]

D. Actions to Set Aside Conveyances. In an action to set aside a deed from a parent to a child or from a child to a parent, the burden of proving undue influence is on the party asserting it,[38] and the evidence must show that the influence was such as to overcome the will of the grantor and to destroy, to some extent at least, his free agency;[39] and it must appear that the undue influence was exercised at the time the act referred to was done.[40] The mere fact that the distribution made by a parent of his property among his children appears unjust and unreasonable will not alone establish undue influence,[41] and prior declarations of an intention contrary to the subsequent disposition cannot be shown to establish undue influence in respect to the disposition finally made.[42]

IX. GIFTS[43] BETWEEN PARENT AND CHILD.

A. Validity — 1. In General. There is nothing in the relationship of parent and child to preclude the one from accepting a benefit from the other in the way of a gift;[44] but on the contrary the relation is a sufficient consideration to sustain a conveyance or transfer from the parent to the child.[45]

2. Parol Gifts of Land. A parol gift of land from a parent to a child, properly executed by possession and improvements, is valid.[46] But in order to sustain such a gift, the evidence thereof must be positive and unambiguous and the terms clearly defined;[47] and a promise by a father to give his son a tract of land cannot be enforced merely because the son made expenditures in improvements, not in execution of the promise nor at the father's request.[48]

3. Preferences Among Children. If preferences are manifested by parents in the disposition of their estates the law has no concern therewith, unless mental incapacity, fraud, or undue influence be shown.[49]

B. What Constitutes Gift — 1. In General. In order to constitute a gift between parent and child there must be an intention on the part of the donor to make a gift,[50] and hence the parent's merely permitting the child to occupy his land does not amount to a gift of such land.[51] Where the father conveys to his children valuable lands in consideration of love and affection and a nominal money consideration, the receipt of which he acknowledges, the transaction is a gift and not a sale.[52]

2. Necessity For Delivery. While the mere fact that the donee is the child of the donor does not dispense with the necessity of a delivery in order to constitute a valid gift,[53] the formal ceremony of a delivery is not essentially necessary, but it is sufficient if it appear that the donor intended an actual gift at the time and evidenced his intention by some act which may be fairly construed into a delivery.[54] And it has been held that delivery may be dispensed with where the child is in the family and under the immediate control of the parent,[55] and in such case the possession is presumed to be in the child, although the property remains in the parent's house,[56] on his premises,[57] or under his control.[58]

3. Necessity For Acceptance. An acceptance by the donee is necessary to the validity of a gift from parent to child.[59]

C. Curing Defects. The courts may cure a defect in an instrument by which a parent has attempted to make provision for the child.[60]

D. Effect of Gift. Gifts by a father to his child not in the way of support and with the understanding that they shall become the property of the child belong to the child.[61]

E. Revocation. A gift by a parent to a child fully executed by delivery, is, like any other gift, irrevocable by the donor.[62]

F. Presumptions — 1. As to Nature of Transaction. Where a parent places personal property in the possession of the child and the child retains possession, the presumption is that a gift was intended;[63] and this rule is especially applicable where, upon the marriage of a child or shortly thereafter, the parent delivers personal property to the child or the child's spouse;[64] but such presumption is subject to be overcome by proof that the intention of the parent was not to make an absolute gift.[65] The legal inference arising from advances of money by a parent to his child, when unexplained, is that they were by way of gift and not by way of loan;[66] but where a child makes a contract by purchase with a stranger and no conveyance is executed, and all the father does is to join in the bond for the purchase-money, there can be no presumption that the father was to pay the purchase-money as a gift to the child.[67] Possession by a son after his father's death of a note given by him to his father does not give rise to the presumption of a gift by the father to the son,[68] nor is a gift of land from the father to the son to be inferred from the fact that the son goes into possession of such land and makes improvements.[69]

Understanding between parties.— An understanding between a father and son-in-law, then recently married, that certain slaves delivered to the latter were intended for his wife, and would be secured by deed of trust for her and her children, repels the presumption of a gift to the son-in-law. Gunn v. Barrow, 17 Ala. 743.

Declarations of the parties inconsistent with the idea of a gift are sufficient to rebut the presumption that a gift was intended. Rich v. Mobley, 33 Ga. 85; Stewart v. Cheatham, 3 Yerg. Resumption of possession.— Where slaves were transferred by a mother to her son-in-law on his marriage, and possession of the slaves was afterward resumed by her and retained for a number of years, the resumption of the possession by the mother, with the testimony of the donee that the transfer was a loan, sufficiently rebutted the presumption of a gift. Under Ga. Code (1895), § 3571, the exclusive possession by a child of land belonging originally to the father, without payment of rent, for the space of seven years creates a conclusive presumption of a gift and conveys title to the child, unless there is evidence of a loan, or of a claim of dominion by the father, acknowledged by the child, or of a disclaimer of title on the part of the child. See Burch v. Burch, 96 Ga. 133, 22 S. E. 718 (holding that where a son in possession of land belonging to the father conveyed the land, before the expiration of seven years, to his wife and children, who retained possession of the land until the seven years expired, the father was not divested of title, although the son remained in possession with the wife and children until the completion of the seven

2. As to Validity of Gift. The mere existence of the parental relation raises no presumption against the validity of a gift by a parent to a child;[70] and it is not to be presumed that the gift was the result of fraud or undue influence,[71] but the burden is on the donor or those claiming under him to show that the gift was not free and voluntary and intended to be irrevocable.[72] The existence of a fiduciary or confidential relation between a parent and his child in addition to the family relation is not necessarily fatal to a deed or gift from the former to the latter,[73] but it throws upon the donee the burden of proving that the transaction was a fair one.[74] Where a gift is made by a child to a parent before the parental authority or dominion has terminated, it is presumed to have been made under parental influence, and to be therefore invalid;[75] and the burden of proof lies on the parent to rebut this presumption by showing that the child had independent advice or was otherwise placed in a position to exercise an independent judgment as to the gift.[76]

G. Admissibility of Evidence.[77] On the question of whether or not a gift was intended, evidence is admissible as to the acts[78] and declarations[79] of the donor. Evidence is also admissible of similar gifts of the parent to other chilyears, for after the execution of the deed the son's possession was not legally exclusive and in his own right); Hardman v. Nowell, 84 Ga. 46, 10 S. E. 370 (holding that a father, in order to recover land which has been in his child's possession more than seven years, need only show either that the child went into possession of the land under an agreement that it was to be loaned to him, or that the father claimed dominion over the land, and that the claim was acknowledged by the child, or that the child disclaimed title to the land, and the father need not establish more than one of these defenses to his child's claim of ownership); Johnson v. Griffin, 80 Ga. 551, 7 S. (Ky.) 502, holding that, to repel the presumption that the delivery of a slave by a father to a child was a gift, it would be competent to prove that the father, after making gifts to his other children, declared that he would not again give slaves to his daughters on their marriage, but that whatever advancements he might make should be on loan.

dren,[80] or of the general plan of the parent to lend and not to give property to his children under similar circumstances;[81] but the donor's habits of business are not admissible to fix the nature of a transaction as a gift to one child, there being no evidence of similar gifts to other children.[82] Where there is no direct evidence of a gift, evidence of a custom among the class to which the parties belonged to make gifts similar to that claimed under similar circumstances is not admissible.[83]

H. Sufficiency of Evidence. The general rules as to the sufficiency of evidence[84] to sustain or defeat alleged gifts[85] are applicable where the gift is between parent and child.[86]

I. Question For Jury. Whether or not a particular transaction amounted to a gift is a question for the jury.[87]

X. ACTIONS BETWEEN PARENT AND CHILD.

Actions by children against their parents are not to be encouraged[88] unless to redress clear and palpable injustice,[89] and a minor child has no right of action against a parent for the tort of the latter.[90] slaves were transferred by a mother to her son-in-law on his marriage, and the possession of the slaves was afterward resumed by her and retained for a number of years, no evidence of the donor's declarations could be given to change a gift, which was presumed from such a transfer, to a loan, unless they were made in the presence of the donee at the time of the transfer or immediately communicated to the donee. XI. AGENCY[91] OF CHILD FOR PARENT.

The mere existence of the family relation does not constitute the child the agent of the parent,[92] or render the parent liable for debts contracted by the child,[93] unless he expressly or impliedly authorized the child to incur the debt on his account[94] or promised to pay the debt.[95] But a child may act as agent for the parent, and if the parent constitutes the child his agent he is bound by the child's contracts made pursuant to the agency.[96] The parent's recognition of the child's agency for him in certain transactions will give rise to an implied agency under which the parent is bound by the child's subsequent transactions of the same character,[97] unless the person dealing with the child was put on inquiry as to a Dumser v. Underwood, 68 Ill. App. 121.

Scope of authority.— Where a father and son living in different states are principal and agent, although the relationship might imply greater confidence, it does not imply authority to do unusual and undesirable acts. Ritch v. Smith, 82 N. Y. 627, 60 How. Pr. 157 [affirming 60 How. Pr. 13].

The child is not bound by a contract with one who knew of his agency. Emery-Bird-Thayer Dry Goods Co. v. Coomer, 87 Mo. App. 404, holding that a child accustomed to make purchases at a store, which were charged to the parent, does not become liable for such articles as were for his own personal use, although the purchase was made after his majority, since one dealing as a known agent with a third person does not become personally liable.

Connecticut.— Bailey v. King, 41 Conn. 365 (holding that a father's payment of his son's bills to B without objection, after publishing a notice forbidding all persons to trust the son on his account, was a waiver of his rights under the notice, so far as B was concerned); Bryan v. Jackson, 4 Conn. 288 (holding that where a father paid for what his minor son bought on trust, without expressing any dischange of circumstances showing that an agency no longer existed.[98] Where a parent has ratified acts done or contracts made by the child on his behalf, he is of course bound.[99] Whether or not the child was the agent of the parent in a particular transaction is a question of fact to be determined from the evidence.[1]

XII. LIABILITY OF PARENT FOR TORTS[2] OF CHILD.

Under the civil law[3] and under the statutes, in a few jurisdictions,[4] a parent is liable for the torts of his minor child. But at common law it is well established that the mere relation of parent and child imposes upon the parent no liability for the torts of the child committed without his knowledge or authority, express or implied;[5] and although where a parent authorizes the child to act as his agent approbation or giving the tradesmen notice not to trust him further, he was liable for goods subsequently furnished the son, although he had given instructions to the son to contract no more debts, and had placed him under the care of a person who was to furnish him with everything necessary and suitable).

Illinois.— Murphy v. Ottenheimer, 84 Ill. 39, 25 Am. Rep. 424, holding that where a father permits his minor son to buy goods on his credit, the fact that the son has left the father will not prevent a recovery against the latter for goods sold to the son by a person acting on the faith of the agency of the son, and without notice of the change of relation or circumstances to put him on inquiry.

Effect of lapse of time.— When the authority of the son to bind his father for goods furnished is once shown to exist, the lapse of fifteen months will not overcome the presumption of the continuance of that authority, so as to discharge the father from liability for goods subsequently furnished, it being shown that during all that time the son was absent from the place where the two accounts were contracted. See also Thayer v. White, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 343, holding that where a son with his father's consent had at several times bought goods of plaintiff on the credit of his father, and a sale was made to such son and charged to the father, who was notified of the sale and made no reply to the notice, it showed either original authority in the son or an affirmance by the father which bound him to pay for the goods.

1. See cases cited infra, this note.

Admissibility of evidence.— A promise by the father to pay the debt in certain events is admissible on the question whether he authorized the son to contract it. Brown v. Deloach, 28 Ga. 486.

Under this statute the father is liable for damages from his minor's son's intentionally or carelessly shooting another boy, not in self-defense. Marionneaux v. Brugier, 35 La. Ann. 13. But when a minor is obeying a sheriff's command to serve on a posse comitatus he is not subject to the parental authority, and hence his father is not liable for damages resulting from an accidental shooting by the minor while so engaged. Coats v. Roberts, 35 La. Ann. 891. In order to hold the father liable for the child's shooting a person with intent to kill, it must be shown that the person who was shot was not himself at fault in the difficulty which resulted in the shooting. Miller v. Meche, 111 La. 143, 35 So. 491. The liability of the father for the act of a minor child is not affected by his absence at the time of the act complained of, or by the tender age of the child, as the fault is imputable by law to the father as the result of some want of care, watchfulness, and discipline. Mullins v. Blaise, 37 La. Ann. 92. This provision is not applicable to the contracts of minors. Doumeing v. Haydel, 9 La. 446.

Under Quebec Civ. Code, § 1054, a father is liable for an injury caused by the act of his minor son unless he shows that it was impossible to prevent the same. Reasonable anticipation of injury.— In order to render a parent liable for the tort of his infant son, it is essential that it should appear from the evidence that he might reasonably have anticipated the injury as a consequence of permitting such son to employ the agency which produced the injury, and such danger cannot be reasonably anticipated from permitting a boy twelve years old to rules of negligence[10] rather than the relation of parent and child. A parent who commands or causes a child to commit an act causing damage to another is responsible as having permitted such act, although an irresponsible agent was employed;[11] and if a father knows that his minor child is committing a tort and makes no effort to restrain him, he will be deemed to have authorized or consented to its commission so as to render him liable.[12]

XIII. LIABILITY OF PARENT FOR CRIMES[13] OF CHILD.

The parental relation does not impose upon the parent any criminal liability for acts of his child to which he is in no way a party;[14] but the liability of the parent for such acts arises only when he has counseled, aided, or abetted the child therein, in which case the parent is liable as an aider and abetter of any other criminal would be and not on account of the parental relation.[15]

XIV. STEPCHILDREN.

A. The Relation in General. The relation of step-parent and stepchild is that existing between a husband or wife and the child of the spouse by a former marriage.[16] A stepfather does not merely, by reason of the relation, stand in loco parentis[17] to his stepchild;[18] but where the stepfather receives the stepchild into his family and treats it as a member thereof, he stands in the place of the natural parent,[19] and the reciprocal rights, duties, and obligations of parent and child continue as long as such relation continues.[20]

Matter of intention.—Whether a stepfather has admitted a stepchild into his family, and treated it as a member, so as to create the reciprocal rights and obligations of natural parent and child, is to a great extent a question of intention, which should not be lightly nor hastily inferred. Englehardt v. Yung, 76 Ala. 534.

Presumption as to relation.—Where a stepfather voluntarily assumes the care and custody of a stepchild, the presumption is that he stands in loco parentis, and that they deal as parent and child, and not as master and servant; but when it appears that the stepfather qualified as guardian of the stepchild, and as such guardian furnished it with necessaries, and charged for them in his accounts, the presumption that he acted in loco parentis is rebutted. B. Custody of Child. A stepfather has, by reason of the relation merely, no right to the custody of his stepchildren,[21] but he may be entitled to the custody if he stands in loco parentis to the children.[22]

C. Support and Education of Child — 1. Duty and Liability of Stepfather. A stepfather is not, merely by virtue of his marriage, under any obligation to support the children of his wife by a former husband;[23] but if he has assumed the parental relation to the children and holds them out to the world as members of his own family, he incurs the same liability with respect to their support and maintenance as if they were his own children.[24] It has been held, however, that a court of chancery will not make the support of infant children a charge on the property of their stepfather, where ample provision is otherwise made for their support.[25]

2. Rights of Stepfather. A stepfather may receive his stepchildren into his family under such circumstances as to raise a presumption that he intends to support them gratuitously,[26] and if he has voluntarily assumed the care and support of his infant stepchildren, he cannot recover any compensation therefor,[27] as in such case no contract to pay for the children's support will be presumed or implied.[28] But the mere fact that the stepchildren live with the stepfather is not conclusive against his right to be compensated or reimbursed for the expense of their support, and he is entitled to recover therefor as against the children or their separate property where he has never assumed the parental relation or the obligation to support them.[29]

A stepchild is under no obligation to support the step-parent,[30] and may in a proper case recover for support and necessaries furnished.[31] Where parents have lived with a stepchild, the jury is the proper tribunal to decide, on the facts proved, whether or not they should pay for their board.[32]

F. Actions For Injuries to Child. A stepfather who has assumed the parental relation to a stepchild has a right of action for an injury to the child causing a loss of his services.[37]

G. Property of Child. H. Gifts and Conveyances Between Parent and Child. Where a stepfather allows his property to go into the possession of a stepchild, the presumption of a gift does not arise as in the case of parent and child;[40] but where land is occupied by a man and his stepchildren, to whom he stands in loco parentis, as tenants in common, and he uses money earned in part by them to pay off encumbrances against the joint estate, it will be held that such payments were intended as a gift to the children.[41] A conveyance made by a daughter to her mother and stepfather as a family adjustment of their respective rights in certain property, which conveyance is made upon her coming of age but while under the influence of the grantees, can be upheld in a court of equity only by clear proof that under all the circumstances it was just and equitable.[42]

D. Services of Child. A person standing in loco parentis is entitled to the services of the child,[51] and the child cannot maintain a claim against such person for services rendered in the absence of an express or implied agreement to pay therefor.[52] But it has been held that where one in loco parentis fails to provide for the education and maintenance of the child, there is a resulting liability for the child's services which is enforceable by the child upon attaining its majority.[53]

E. Actions For Injuries to Child. A person in loco parentis may recover against a wrong-doer who is responsible for an injury to the child for the resulting expense and loss of services;[54] but one who stands temporarily in loco parentis, and who may abandon that relation at any time and upon whom there is no obligation, legal or moral, to maintain and support the infant, cannot, in case of an injury to the infant, recover the value of the infant's services during his minority and thereby defeat the infant's recovery for his diminished capacity to earn money during those years.[55]

Poverty as rebutting presumption of gratuity.— Where the father and mother of an infant but a few years old died, and left some property, but neither an executor nor any person to take care of their child, and a woman who was poor took the child and supported it for a year, and then administration was taken out on the estate, it was held that the woman's poverty repudiated the presumption of a gift to the child, and that she could recover for expense and trouble in caring for and maintaining it. Where there is an understanding or agreement that the services of the child are to be paid for, such services constitute a valid consideration for a subsequent promise to pay. Sword v. Keith, 31 Mich. 247.

Unfulfilled promise as rebutting presumption that payment not intended.— Where a girl came from another state at the request of her uncle, to stay in his family and work for him, under a promise that she should be taught to play the organ and sent to school, and she came and performed, not only the ordinary duties of the household, but other work in addition, and the uncle did not fulfil his promise, she was entitled to recover for her services, since the uncle's promise overcame the usual presumption that where a near relative is taken into a family no compensation for services is intended, beyond that received during the time of such services. either entirely or partially,[57] for the whole minority or for a shorter term,[58] or conditionally or unconditionally,[59] and at what age he will emancipate his child rests in the discretion of the parent.[60]

B. What Constitutes Emancipation. Emancipation of a minor occurs by the voluntary act of the parent in surrendering the rights or renouncing the duties of his position, or in some way conducting himself in relation thereto in a manner inconsistent with any further performance of them.[61] The emancipation may be express or implied,[62] or in writing or oral.[63] The test to be applied is that of the preservation or destruction of the parental and filial relations.[64] The child's arrival at the age of majority is prima facie,[65] but not necessarily,[66] an emancipation. The marriage of the child is an emancipation from the control and authority of the parent,[67] even though the parent did not consent to the marriage.[68] The remarriage of the mother after the death of the father does not

emancipate the children,[69] nor does a separation agreement between the father and mother by which the father promises to return the child to the mother at her request emancipate the child from the father's control.[70] The father's desertion of a minor child will operate as an emancipation;[71] but the child's desertion of the father's home does not constitute emancipation so long as the father has not relinquished his right of control or consented that the child should act for himself independently of the father.[72] The fact that the child is allowed to live away from the parent does not amount to an emancipation,[73] unless it is the intention of the parent to release all parental authority and control.[74] On the other hand the fact that the son lives in the family of the father does not establish that he is not emancipated.[75] A minor child of pauper parents bound out to service until twenty-one years of age, by written indenture, is not thereby emancipated.[76] The payment of a weekly allowance by the parent to the child does not constitute emancipation.[77] Where a father who is able to support his minor son forces him to leave home and labor abroad for a livelihood, the law implies an emancipation.[78] So also an infant is emancipated where he supports

An infant may be emancipated by being given away by its parents. Tunbridge v. Eden, 39 Vt. 17, holding, however, that to constitute emancipation of an infant by gift, it must appear that its parents have absolutely transferred all their right to the care and control of the infant and all their right to its services, and that the person to whom such rights are transferred has accepted the infant as his own child and agreed to stand in loco parentis. himself and pays his board at home,[79] or where the parent allows him to carry on a business for himself and exercises no control over him or his earnings.[80] Where the child contracts for his services and collects and uses his own earnings, emancipation is to be inferred;[81] but a complete emancipation does not necessarily result from the fact that the father allows the child to receive and spend his own wages,[82] or even to contract for his services.[83] If the father gives or sells the child his time the law implies emancipation.[84]

C. Effect of Emancipation.[85] Emancipation of the child is an entire surrender of all the parent's right to the care, custody, and earnings of the child, as well as a renunciation of parental duties, and leaves the child, so far as the parent is concerned, free to act on its own responsibility and in accordance with its own will and pleasure, with the same independence as though it had attained majority.[86]

D. Revocation of Emancipation. The emancipation of a minor child by parol agreement and without consideration is revocable until acted upon.[87] But a contract of employment for a reasonable time made by the child after the act of emancipation and before revocation cannot be disturbed by the parent.[88]

E. Evidence. When an infant becomes of full age its emancipation is presumed;[89] but emancipation of a minor child is not to be presumed in the absence of evidence but must always be proved,[90] although on an issue as to whether an infant is emancipated the jury cannot consider the presumption of non-emancipation as an element of evidence to weigh with testimony of emancipation.[91] Emancipation of the child from the control of the parent may be shown by circumstances,[92] or inferred from the conduct of the parties.[93] Subject to the general rules of relevancy, competency, and materiality,[94] any evidence is admissible which legitimately tends to prove or disprove the fact of emancipation.[95]

F. Question For Jury. Whether or not a child has been emancipated from the control of the parent is a question for the jury.[98]

XVII. ABANDONMENT OR NEGLECT TO SUPPORT.

A. The Statutory Offense. In a number of states the statutes provide for the punishment of a parent or person standing in loco parentis who deserts, abandons, or fails to support or provide for a child, leaving it in a destitute or dependent condition.[99]

Maine.— Carthage v. Canton, 97 Me. 473, 54 Atl. 1104, holding that in order to determine whether or not a parent has emancipated his child and renounced all future parental duties, it is proper to ascertain the subsequent conduct of parent and child in order to throw light on the intent of the parent at the time of the claimed emancipation.

Missouri.— McMorrow v. Dowdell, 116 Mo. App. 289, 90 S. W. 728, holding that it is evidence of the emancipation of a minor and the relinquishment of its wages that the parent, knowing the child is working for stipulated wages, or in expectation of payment, and that the employer and child understand payment is to be made to the child, interposes no objection.

New York.— Canovar v. Cooper, 3 Barb. 115, holding that, where the father was absent for several years, leaving his infant son to manage for himself, the father contributing nothing to his education and support, and not interfering with his engagements, and the minor was in the habit of working for others and receiving pay for his labor himself, and another infant son of the same parent had done the same without objection by the parent, these circumstances were admissible in evidence to show emancipation.

Texas.— Granrud v. Rea, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 299, 59 S. W. 841, holding that a father's contracting with his minor child for her services is evidence against him that he had emancipated her, so that she had a right to so contract.

Construction of statutes.—Ga. Code, § 4373, relating to the criminal liability of a father who abandons his children, and leaves them in a "dependent or destitute" condition, should read "dependent and destitute." Jemmerson v. State, 80 Ga. 111, 5 S. E. 131; McDaniel v. Campbell, 78 Ga. 188. Where an earlier statute provided a punishment if the father "or" mother of any child should abandon it, and in a revision this was changed to read, "If the father 'and' mother," etc., this change did not raise a presumption that the legislature intended that the penalty should be inflicted only when both parents concurred in the abandonment; but the court would construe "and" as meaning "or." State v. Smith, 46 Iowa 670.

B. Elements of Offense — 1. In General. In order to warrant a conviction under such a statute, all the elements of the offense must be made out.[1]

2. Intention. There must be an intention to wholly abandon the child and entirely sever, so far as possible, the parental relation and to throw off all obligations growing out of the same.[2]

3. Desertion. To constitute an abandonment of a child by a father there must be an actual desertion,[3] but an absolute desertion is not necessary to constitute the offense of neglecting the child.[4] While absence is a necessary element in the crime of abandoning destitute and dependent children,[5] abandonment does not mean merely going away from such children,[6] but where a father lawfully leaves his children and they afterward become destitute and dependent and he then wilfully fails to support them he is guilty of abandonment.[7]

4. Destitution of Child. The destitute condition of the abandoned child is sometimes made an element of the offense,[8] and where it is so a father who merely separates from his children, leaving them in proper care and provided for, is not guilty of the statutory offense.[9]

C. Circumstances of Exposure or Abandonment. If, from the time, place, and manner of leaving the child, its age and dress, the state of the weather, and all circumstances accompanying the transaction, the jury believe that there was reasonable ground to apprehend that injury might thereby happen to the child, then, if the act was accompanied by an intention wholly to abandon, it is an exposure, within a statute providing a punishment for exposure of children with intent to abandon.[10]

Persons liable.— It is not necessary that a party should be a guardian, or one to whom the child may be apprenticed, to bring him within Mich. Comp. Laws, § 5741, providing a punishment for abandonment of children; but any person having the care or custody of the child comes within it. Shannon v. People, 5 Mich. 71. One to whom a child is given by its parent to expose is one to whom it had been "intrusted or confided" within Iowa Code, § 4766, declaring a punishment if a parent of a child under six years of age, or a person to whom such child has been intrusted or confided, expose such child with intent to abandon it. State v. Sparegrove, 134 Iowa 599, 112 N. W. 83.

1. See People v. Joyce, 112 N. Y. App. Div. 717, 98 N. Y. Suppl. 863 [affirmed in 189 N. Y. 518, 81 N. E. 1171], holding that in Pen. Code, § 287, which provides that a parent or other person having the care or custody, for nurture or education, of a child under the age of fourteen years, who deserts the child in any place with intent wholly to abandon it, is punishable by imprisonment for not more than seven years, the words "in any place" are not mere surplusage, but are important in construing the statute, and to make out a crime thereunder it is necessary to show that the child is deserted in a place, and so left with an intent wholly to abandon it, and that a father's leaving his children, two and three years of age, respectively, with their own mother, is not such a desertion and abandonment as the section intends to punish.

E. 131; McDaniel v. Campbell, 78 Ga. 188; Richie v. Com., 64 S. W. 979, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1237, holding that St. § 329, providing for the punishment of a parent who wilfully deserts his child, under six years of age, "in a manner showing a reckless disregard to life and health, and with the intention wholly to abandon it," does not authorize the punishment of a father who leaves his child, less than one year old, in the custody and care of its mother, although he fails to provide for the child's support.

10. Shannon v. People, 5 Mich. 71.

D. Defenses. It is not a sufficient defense that the child was not born when the father left his wife,[11] or that the child voluntarily left its home.[12] And it has been held that the fact that defendant was willing to support the child and had offered to do so on its surrender to his custody by the wife does not constitute a defense.[13] So also the misconduct of the mother by reason of which the father cannot live with her or the mother's refusal to live with the father is no excuse for his leaving their child dependent and destitute.[14] But where a father has been once convicted and punished for desertion of his child, there can be no new offense of desertion authorizing a second conviction unless he has returned to the discharge of his parental duty to the child and again deserted it.[15]

E. Nature of Proceeding. A proceeding against a person for the non-support of his children, instituted by a private individual, is a criminal proceeding, and can be prosecuted by the town authorities, or the sureties on complainant's bond should complainant die before the final determination of the case.[16]

F. Jurisdiction and Venue.[17] In order to warrant a conviction for abandonment the desertion must have taken place within the state,[18] but the place where the children were and not where the father was at the time or during the period complained of fixes the venue of a prosecution for non-support of the children.[19]

G. Indictment or Information.[20] The indictment must allege all the elements of the offense[21] and show that defendant sustained a relation to the child bringing him within the statute,[22] but it need not negative matters of defense.[23] It has been held that an indictment stating the offense substantially in the language

15. Gay v. State, 105 Ga. 599, 31 S. E. 569, 70 Am. St. Rep. 68, holding that this is true notwithstanding the fact that the original abandonment is wilfully continued and the child remains dependent and destitute.

16. State v. Peabody, 25 R. I. 178, 55 Atl. 323, holding further that, although a private individual instituting a criminal complaint against a person for non-support of the latter's children is required to give security for the costs, this does not render the case any less a state case than if it were brought by a prosecuting officer, and hence the proceeding is not abated by the death of the complainant before its final determination.

J. L. 576 (holding that under Rev. p. 305, providing that a husband who deserts or neglects his family shall be adjudged a disorderly person, and that whenever any overseer of the poor believes that a person does so, "and that by reason thereof, such family may become chargeable" to the township, it shall be his duty to make complaint, it must be averred and proved, upon such complaint, that the family may become chargeable to the township).

of the statute is sufficient;[24] but this has been denied and the view asserted that it is essential that the particular facts showing the circumstanees of the alleged desertion of the child should be set out in the indictment with sueh detail as to advise the accused of the speeifie offense with which he is eharged.[25]

H. Issues, Proof, and Variance.[26] An indictment alleging that the child had been confided to defendant is supported by proof that it was delivered to another person employed by him and under his control and direction.[27]

I. Evidence.[28] The proof must establish all the neeessary elements of the offense,[29] and that defendant sustained a relation to the child bringing him within the statute.[30] While the legitimacy of the children must be proved, a marriage need not be shown by the record thereof, or by the marriage certificate, but it may be proved by the wife, or admitted by defendant.[31] Statements by defendant to the witness that he would do nothing toward supporting the child, made a few days before the statute punishing non-support went into effect, are admissible to show that the neglect was intentional,[32] and evidence of the father's eonduct toward his family after the time of his alleged abandonment is admissible to show his intent at that time.[33] Irrelevant[34] or immaterial[35] evidence is properly exeluded.

XVIII. ENTICING AWAY OR HARBORING CHILD.

A. Right of Action. A parent[36] or person standing in loco parentis[37] has a right of action against one who unlawfully entices away or harbors the child. As between parents the right of action belongs exclusively to the father, and while both parents are living together the mother has no right of action,[38] but after the death of the father the right of aetion is in the mother.[39] A parent's eleetion to sue for the child's wages is a waiver of the tort and bars his right to recover for enticing the child away.[40]

B. Persons Liable. A person is liable in an action by a father for illegally abducting his minor child, although he only obeyed the orders of another person who illegally assumed to direct the removal of the child from the father's custody.[41]

C. Basis of Right of Action. Some of the authorities base the parent's right of action upon the loss of services, so that if there be no actual loss of services there can be no recovery;[42] but the better doctrine is that the right of action is based upon the right to services so that the parent may recover, although the child renders no services and there is consequently no loss of services.[43] In either view, however, a parent who has emancipated the child or relinquished or lost his right to the child's services cannot maintain the action.[44]

D. When Action Lies. The essence of the tort of decoying a minor from home, or harboring him after he leaves home, against his parents' will, thus depriving his parents of his services, is the unlawful enticement or harboring of the minor.[45] In order that a parent may maintain an action there must have been some active or affirmative effort by defendant to detract the child from his service,[46] and it is necessary that the enticing and harboring shall have been wilful, with notice or knowledge that the child had parents whose rights were thereby invaded.[47] Employing a minor and affording him shelter against the will of a father able and willing to provide for him is a harboring sufficient to make the party liable in damages to the father.[48]

E. Defenses. The right of a father to the possession of his children being paramount to that of the mother, it is no defense, in an action by the father for taking away his infant child, that defendant acted in conjunction with or in aid of the mother.[49] In an action for unlawfully harboring and concealing plaintiff's minor son and inducing him to enlist in the service of the United States as a substitute for defendant, defendant is not liable if he believed that the son had left the father's service with his father's consent;[50] but the recovery or receipt by plaintiff, as administrator, of the bounty money of defendant, and of the son's back pay from the government, is not tantamount to a consent by plaintiff that his son might enter into the military service of the government as a substitute for defendant, and does not constitute a defense to the action.[51] If the original receiving and harboring of the child was wrongful, it is no defense that on the parent's demand defendant attempted to return the child but was unsuccessful because he ran away.[52]

F. Form of Action. It has been held that trespass vi et armis is the proper remedy of a parent for the taking away of his child,[53] but this has been denied and the view asserted that trespass on the case is the proper remedy.[54] It has also been held that a parent may maintain a suit in admiralty for the wrongful abduction of the child and carrying him beyond the seas.[55]

G. Pleading.[56] It is necessary to aver knowledge on the part of defendant that the minor owed service to plaintiff and wrongfully deserted that service;[57] and where the action is brought by the mother, the petition must show the death of the father or other facts authorizing the mother to maintain the action.[58] A declaration for enticing away a minor child from his father's family may be amended by adding a count for harboring and secreting him and persuading him to remain absent from his father's family and service without his consent.[59]

H. Evidence.[60] Plaintiff must prove that defendant had knowledge that the minor owed service to plaintiff and wrongfully deserted that service,[61] and evidence on behalf of defendant to show that he had not notice of such facts is admissible.[62] But evidence that the child was well cared for after its removal from the father's possession is not admissible.[63] The general rules as to the suffi-

62. Caughey v. Smith, 47 N. Y. 244, holding that in an action for unlawfully harboring and concealing plaintiff's minor son, and inducing him to enlist in the service of the United States as a substitute for defendant, it was competent, for the purpose of showing that defendant believed that the son had left the father's service with the father's consent, to show that the son stated to defendant that his father was willing he should enter the military service of the government. But compare Rice v. Nickerson, 9 Allen (Mass.) 478, 85 Am. Dec. 777, holding that defendant in an action of tort for the abduction of plaintiff's minor child could not show that he acted in ignorance of plaintiff's rights, or that the child had expressed a desire to be removed, where plaintiff disavowed any claim against defendant on the ground of malice.

I. Instructions.[66] The case must be submitted under instructions correctly stating the law as applicable to the facts shown and proper under the general rules relating to instructions.[67]

J. Elements of Recovery. The parent is entitled to recover for the loss of the child's services,[68] the injury to the parent's feelings,[69] his mental suffering caused by the wrong,[70] the loss of the companionship of the child,[71] and reasonable and proper expenditures incurred in seeking to regain possession of the child.[72]

K. Criminal Liability. Under some statutes knowingly decoying or enticing away a minor from his parents is made a criminal offense,[73] but such offense is not committed by merely hiring a minor with knowledge that he has a parent living.[74]

PARENTHESIS. An explanatory or qualifying clause, sentence, or paragraph, inserted in another sentence, or in course of a longer passage, without being grammatically connected with it;[1] a sentence so enclosed in another sentence as that it may be taken out without injuring the sense of that which encloses it.[2]

PARENTUM EST LIBEROS ALERE ETIAM NOTHOS. A maxim meaning "It is the duty of parents to support their children even when illegitimate."[3]

PARESIS. A term used to designate the wasting away of the brain tissue, without softening.[4] (See, generally, INSANE PERSONS.)

PARIA COPULANTUR CUM PARIBUS. A maxim meaning "Like things unite with like."[5]

64. See, generally, EVIDENCE.

65. See Soper v. Crutchfield, 96 S. W. 907, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 1080 (holding the evidence sufficient to sustain a verdict for defendants); Loomis v. Deets, (Md. 1894) 30 Atl. 612 (holding the evidence insufficient to show that defendant intended to deprive plaintiff of the control and services of his son by harboring him and refusing to allow plaintiff to get possession and control of him).

66. See, generally, TRIAL.

67. Propriety of particular instructions see Loomis v. Deets, (Md. 1894) 30 Atl. 612; Stowe v. Heywood, 7 Allen (Mass.) 118; Caughey v. Smith, 47 N. Y. 244.

68. Bundy v. Dodson, 28 Ind. 295 (holding that where defendant enticed away the minor son of plaintiff against his father's consent, and placed him in the United States army as a substitute, he was liable to plaintiff for the value of his son's services during the whole period of his absence as a soldier); Washburn v. Abram, 90 S. W. 997, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 985; Soper v. Igo, 89 S. W. 538, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 519, 1 L. R. A. N. S. 362.

Period to which recovery may extend.— In an action to recover damages for loss of service by defendant's enticing away plaintiff's son or servant, as distinguished from the case of loss of service resulting from a personal injury of a permanent nature, plaintiff cannot recover damages for the whole of the term in which he was thus entitled to such service, but only up to the time of commencing his action, or perhaps up to the time of trial. Covert v. Gray, 34 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 450.

Vindictive damages are not intended to be given by N. H. Rev. St. c. 154, § 123, authorizing an action on the case by a parent against a shipmaster transporting an infant out of the state without the parent's consent; but in such an action the measure of damages is the value of the child's services up to the time of bringing suit, or if the child died previously, up to his death. I. DEFINITION.

Parliamentary law may be defined as that body of recognized usages governing parliamentary and legislative assemblies which takes its name from the British parliament[1] and on the practice of which it is mainly founded, with such changes and modifications in American deliberative bodies as have been necessary to adapt it to the usages of this country.[2]

II. ORGANIZATION OF DELIBERATIVE BODIES.

A. In General. In all cases where part of a deliberative body remains, and is to be completed by the reception of new members, it remains an organized nucleus, and in its organized form receives new members and is not dissolved by the incoming elements.[3]

B. Adoption of Particular Rules — 1. IN GENERAL. The right of deliberative bodies to determine their own rules of procedure must be exercised in conformity with existing laws.[4]

2. TEMPORARILY. Where a body resolves that the rules of a prior body be adopted until a committee report rules, the prior rules cease to be in force on the report of the committee.[5]

III. MODE OF PROCEEDINGS.

A. As to Presiding Officer — 1. TAKING CHAIR. In carrying on the proceedings of a deliberative body the chair is not to be taken until a quorum for business is present, unless after due waiting such a quorum is despaired of, when the chair may be taken and the meeting adjourned.[6]

2. ELECTION OF OFFICER PRO TEMPORE. Where the officer whose legal right and duty it is to preside over the meetings of a deliberative body is necessarily or wilfully absent, the body ex necessitate has authority to elect a presiding officer pro tempore.[7]

B. Quorum or Number Necessary to Act — 1. IN GENERAL. Where a quorum is not fixed by the constitution or statute creating a deliberative body, consisting of a definite number, the general rule is that a quorum is a majority of all the members of the body.[8] In case, however, the number of members of the body is indefinite, the majority of those members present at a regular meeting constitutes a quorum for the transaction of business.[9]

2. DIMINUTION IN NUMBERS. Whenever the number required to constitute a quorum is fixed by statute or other rule, a diminution in the number of members of the body will not change the number necessary for a quorum.[10]

3. PRESUMPTION REGARDING. Where the roll call shows a quorum assembled for the transaction of business, but the roll call on a proposition discloses that less than a quorum voted, it will not be presumed that a quorum was present at the time the vote was taken.[11]

C. Right of Minority to Deliberate. The opportunity to deliberate, and, if possible, to convince their fellows, is the right of a minority of which they cannot be deprived by the arbitrary will of the majority.[12]

D. Voting — 1. MANNER OF. The original purpose of a division to ascertain the will of a body, the ayes occupying one part of the hall, and the noes another, and there remaining until the powers appointed counted them, is usually effected in modern deliberative bodies by a call of the house, a yea or nay vote when each member's name is called.[13]

2. Disqualification to Vote by Interest — a. In General. If a deliberative body adopts the rule that no member immediately interested in a proposition shall vote thereon, such rule will be binding on the members, so as to invalidate the election of a member who casts a ballot for himself.[14]

b. Pecuniary — (I) General Rule. The general rule at common law is that members of a deliberative body are disqualified to act on propositions in which they have a direct pecuniary interest.[15]

(II) Exception. An exception to this rule is recognized where the deliberative body itself is permitted to fix the compensation of its members.[16]

3. Number of Votes Required — a. In General. The general rule is that, in the absence of express provision to the contrary, a proposition is carried in a deliberative body by a majority of the legal votes cast.[17] However, where the statute requires a majority[18] or two thirds[19] of all the members, a vote of less than that number, although a majority of those present and voting, is not sufficient. So too where a statute requires all the members of a body to be present when a vote

S. E. 250, 53 Am. St. Rep. 580, 30 L. R. A. 532.

When polling not commenced.— At an annual town meeting the motion was made that the meeting should adjourn to a day certain. The moderator, being unable to determine which way the majority was by counting the hands, stated that fact to the meeting. A poll of the house was demanded, and tellers were appointed who reported that the majority were in favor of adjournment, and the vote was so declared by the moderator. It was then moved that the meeting should proceed to vote for town representative, and the moderator arranged the poll box and check list for that purpose. Before any polls were given in, the vote declared by the moderator on the question of adjournment was questioned by the proper number of voters. It was held that the business of polling for town representative was not "commenced," so as to render it too late to question the vote as declared by the moderator. Kimball v. Lamprey, 19 N. is to be taken on a proposition, a majority vote of all the members of the body is necessary.[20]

b. Members Present Declining to Vote. Where a quorum is present a proposition is carried by a majority of the votes cast, although some of the members present refuse to vote.[21]

c. Motion to Adjourn. The rule applicable to all deliberative bodies is that any number have power to adjourn, although they may not constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.[22]

d. Adoption of Rules. Although the rules of a prior deliberative body, temporarily adopted until a committee can report, provide that an amendment thereof cannot be made except by a two-thirds vote, the new rules adopted by the committee may be adopted by a majority vote.[23]

e. Suspension of Rules. If a body adopts the commonly accepted parliamentary rules for its governance, such rules cannot be suspended except by a unanimous vote of all the members present.[24]

f. Reconsideration. Where by statute a vote of two thirds is required to pass a resolution, and no rule has been adopted regulating practice on motions for reconsideration, a two thirds vote is necessary therefor.[25]

4. Casting Vote — a. Nature of. By the common law a casting vote sometimes signifies the single vote of a person who never votes, except in case of an equality, and sometimes the double vote of a person who first votes with the rest, and then, upon an equality, creates a majority by giving a second vote.[26]

b. Right to Cast. The presiding officer of a deliberative body, having a definite number of members, has the power in case of a tie to give the casting vote.[27]

No equal division possible.— If there is an odd number of members present and participating in the action of the body, it is obvious that there can be no tie, so as to authorize the presiding officer to give the casting vote. State v. Chapman, 44 Conn. 595, holding that where twenty-two ballots are for one candidate and twenty-two for another, and a blank ballot is cast, there is no tie which will authorize the presiding officer to give a casting vote, as there cannot be an equal division of the members. See also Lawrence

c. Manner of Casting. The action of the presiding officer of a body consisting of a definite number of members in declaring that an officer is elected as the result of a ballot is not equivalent to giving a casting vote.[28]

5. Determination of Result of Vote — a. What May Be Shown For That Purpose. The circumstances leading up to the final determination of the result of a vote may always be shown for the purpose of showing the invalidity of the final adjudication.[29]

b. Authority of Tellers. In determining and announcing the result of a vote, the authority of tellers is not terminated by the resignation of the presiding officer who appointed them.[30]

E. Reconsideration — 1. By Whom Motion Therefor Made. Parliamentary law requires that the motion to reconsider must be made by one who voted with the majority on the motion proposed to be reconsidered.[31] A majority, however, can dispense with the rule requiring a reconsideration to be moved by one who voted with the majority, and if the majority treat the motion as regularly made it is to be considered as a tacit suspension of the rule.[32]

2. Conclusiveness of — a. As to Question Reconsidered. A reconsideration of a question by a deliberative body is final and there can be no further reconsideration of the matter.[33]

b. Upon Other Bodies. A motion to reconsider rests exclusively in the discretion of the body whose action it is proposed to reconsider, and no other body or tribunal has the right to treat a reconsideration as void.[34]

F. Motion to Adjourn. After one motion to adjourn has been disposed of, another motion to adjourn is not in order unless some intermediate question has been proposed.[35] However, if no objection is made to the renewal of a motion to adjourn without the interposition of some intermediate question, an objection to such successive motions to adjourn will be deemed waived.[36]

G. Adjourned Meetings — 1. Notice of. Members of deliberative bodies are bound to take notice of the time of adjournments, and to be present at the time and place of adjournment without special notice.[37]

2. What Business Considered at — a. Regular. Where a regular meeting is adjourned any business which would have been proper to consider at that meeting may be considered and acted on at the adjourned meeting.[38]

A. 308. Compare Rushville Gas Co. v. Rushville, 121 Ind. 206, 23 N. E. 72, 16 Am. St. Rep. 388, 6 L. R. A. 315; Small v. Orne, 79 Me. 78, 8 Atl. 152, holding that where by statute a presiding officer has the right to give a casting vote and, if two candidates have each one half of the votes cast, "determine and declare which of them is elected," it is not necessary to go through the formality of casting a ballot.

29. State v. Hutchins, 33 Nebr. 335, 50 N. W. 165, holding further that where at a special meeting the teller reported a vote in the affirmative of a proposition, and before the result was announced by the presiding officer objections were made that more votes had been cast than there were voters present, whereupon the presiding officer, by placing those in favor of and those opposed to the proposition in separate lines, found that there was a tie vote and thereupon voted "No," the final result of the balloting as declared by the presiding officer must be accepted as the decision of the body.

b. Special. Nothing can be considered at an adjourned meeting of a special or called meeting, unless it could have been considered and acted on at the special meeting.[39]

H. Third Person Objecting to Breach of Parliamentary Rules. A third person cannot object to a breach of parliamentary rules, the members of the deliberative body alone having that right.[40]

I. Rulings of Presiding Officer — 1. Effect of. The declaration by a presiding officer in announcing the result of a vote that a proposition is carried cannot have the effect of nullifying the act of a majority who have voted in favor of it.[41]

2. Remedy Against, When Obnoxious. The proper method of taking exception to an obnoxious ruling of a presiding officer is by an appeal therefrom to the meeting.[42]

IV. Operation and Effect of Proceedings.

A. Compliance With Statute. Where a deliberative body adopts rules of order for its parliamentary governance, the fact that it violates one of the rules so adopted does not invalidate a measure passed in compliance with statute.[43]

B. Approval of Given Proposition. The action of a deliberative body in reserving by resolution one parcel of realty for a given purpose is not tantamount to an approval of a sale of another parcel for the same purpose.[44]

PARRICIDE. The crime of killing one's father; also a person guilty of killing his father.[10] (See, generally, HOMICIDE.)

PARSON. A term which describes the functionary, whatever title he may bear, who for the time being has the cure of the parish as principal.[11] (See CLERGYMAN; CURATE; PARISH; and, generally, RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.)

PARSONAGE.[12] A house in which a minister of the gospel resides;[13] the residence of the pastor, who conducts public worship in another building devoted exclusively to that object;[14] a certain portion of land, tythes and offerings, established by the laws of this kingdom, for the maintenance of the minister that hath the cure of souls within the parish where he is rector or patron;[15] a parish church

12 Distinguished from "church."— A parsonage house owned by a religious society stands upon a different footing than the church. There is no right of use in common in such parsonage house. It is not a sacred building, like a church edifice, but is, properly speaking, an endowment or source of pecuniary revenue to aid in support of the worship in the church proper. Its use is not spiritual, but temporal. Though it is ordinarily used as a residence for the pastor, there is nothing in its character or ownership to prevent its being used for other purposes, as circumstances may render it profitable or beneficial. Everett v. Asbury Park First Presb. Church, 53 N. J. Eq. 500, 503, 32 Atl. 747.

Not a place for religious worship, within Const. art. 7, § 2, declaring that the legislature may exempt "places of religious worship" from taxation. St. Mark's Church v. Brunswick, 78 Ga. 541, 542, 3 S. E. 561.

Equivalent to "manse" see Everett v. Asbury Park First Presb. Church, 53 N. J. Eq. 500, 503, 32 Atl. 747.

15. Degge Parson's Counselor [quoted in In re Alms Corn Charity, [1901] 2 Ch. 750, 758, 71 L. J. Ch. 76, 85 L. T. Rep. N. S. 533].

In its ecclesiastical sense the word was "glebe (or land) and house" belonging to a parish appropriated to the maintenance of the incumbent or settled pastor of a church; endowed with a house, glebe, tithes, etc., or a certain portion of lands, tithes and offerings established by law for the maintenance of a minister who hath the cure of souls.[16] (See PARSON; and, generally, RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.)

PARSONAGE LANDS. Lands of which a clergyman is seized in right of the town and by virtue of his office.[17] (See PARSONAGE.)

PART.[18] A CONSTITUENT, q. v.; a fragment; a member; a PIECE,[19] q. v.; a DIVISION, q. v.; a section;[20] a half portion or moiety;[21] a share;[22] one of the portions, equal or unequal, into which anything is divided or regarded as divided.[23] According to the connection,[24] the word is said to be broad enough to include everything in a given portion,[25] and may be used interchangeably in the same sense with the word ITEM,[26] q. v. Sometimes it may as appropriately be applied to an undivided as a divided portion.[27] In the plural, as applied to an appropriation of public money, it may mean the particulars, the details, the distinct and severable parts, of the appropriation.[28]

PARTAKER. One who has any part or interest in any action, matter or thing.[29]

but its modern general signification is in the sense of its being the residence of a parson, and it may be with land or without it. Wells v. Underhill Flats Cong. Church, 63 Vt. 116, 119, 21 Atl. 270.

23. Cairo v. Bross, 9 Ill. App. 406, 407.

24. The context may govern the meaning and it may be of a comprehensive character. Thus, a building, whenever it is a permanent improvement, is "land," for the purpose of taxation, and the words "part thereof" may apply to the improvement, as well as to the lot on which it stands. Cincinnati College v. Yeatman, 30 Ohio St. 276, 280.

May not mean an excepted portion.— The term "part," in a deed conveying a tract of land, saving and excepting a small part of said tract, upon which rolling mill improvements now stand, has reference to quantity, as less than the whole, and, properly construed, is not to be taken as meaning necessarily that the part excepted is in one piece or parcel. This is the usual and ordinary signification of the word. As, when we say a part of Maryland is sandy, we are not to be understood that the sandy portion is to be found in one integral piece or parcel of the state's surface. Carroll v. Granite Mfg. Co., 11 Md. 399, 409.

Used in the saving clause of a statute.— The term "part," in a statute providing that all laws and parts of laws not inconsistent with certain other laws, shall be preserved, means a substantive member having such individual features that it can be treated as a distinct entity, and which might be imparted into the new law without marring its harmony or uniformity. Cairo v. Bross, 9 Ill. App. 406, 407.

25. Thus, as used in a will, it is said that a provision reciting that "his or her part" should be equally divided among the survivors, "part" is broad enough in its obvious signification to cover everything bestowed on each child by the will, and must be so understood. Zollicoffer v. Zollicoffer, 20 N. C. 574.

Used in a will it may include that portion of a parent's estate, or of the estate of one standing in the place of a parent, which is given to a child. Lewis' Appeal, 108 Pa. St. 133, 137, where it is said: "It is broad enough to include, and is intended to cover all the property or estate thus received."
